No firm plans for Gym Group listing, says COO

The Gym Group’s chief operating officer Jim Graham has poured cold water on press reports of an imminent £300m listing on the London stock market, insisting that no decision has been taken by the company’s board.

Several reports have surfaced suggesting the chain is poised to go public, citing conversations with city insiders, however Graham told Leisure Opportunities the speculation is premature and that the chain has “no firm plans in place.”

Founded in 2007 by John Treharne with backing from private equity group Bridges Ventures, The Gym Group attracted fresh investment in 2013 when Phoenix Equity Partners bought a majority stake in the business.

“Unlike a private equity-backed business, so obviously (floating) is something we constantly look at and have conversations about, but it’s extremely early to suggest that a listing is imminent,” said Graham, who was operating partner at Phoenix Equity Partners before joining The Gym Group. “Going public would be a decision for the board based on what’s best for the business and its investors, but that isn’t a decision that’s been taken. Also, no decision’s been made on how our private equity investors will one day exit the business, and going public is just one of a number of ways that could happen.”

Graham said speculation regarding the company’s direction was “part and parcel” of being a growing business. The low cost gym chain was recently named in the top 50 UK private companies with the fastest-growing sales and aims to reach 80 sites by the end of 2015.

The rumblings of a stock market listing for The Gym Group come after it scrapped a planned merger with Pure Gym last year amid Competition and Markets Authority scrutiny. Details: http://lei.sr?a=8b2k3_O

Alton Towers to open fourth hotel

After costing parent company Merlin Entertainments around £50m in profits following the Smiler accident, Alton Towers has revealed multi-million pound plans for a fourth hotel as the park aims to become the UK’s leading short break destination.

The four-storey hotel will be built next to the existing Alton Towers Hotel and Spa and will be themed with 74 ‘colonial-style’ family rooms, a restaurant capable of seating 200 people and a café.

Most recently, the park launched its Enchanted Village accommodation, which is made up of 120 fairytale lodges and five luxury tree houses, offering an alternate style of accommodation to Alton Towers’ existing hotels. The park also offers the adjacent Alton Towers Hotel and the Splash Landings hotel and waterpark. Details: http://lei.sr?a=d6a3n_O

A public consultation has been launched to mark the start of a new strategy for sport in the UK – the first step in radically overhauling the way sport is funded.

Launching the consultation, the government warned that public funding is a “privilege not a right” and has intimated it wants to see a better return on investment for grants made to organisations. Sports minister Tracey Crouch said that at the heart of the need for a new strategy was the failure to increase the number of people playing sport since the London 2012 Olympic Games.

Figures from Sport England’s Active People Survey show that nearly 250,000 people have stopped taking part in regular activity over the past six months.

The government hasn’t ruled out the possibility of money potentially being diverted away from national governing bodies (NGBs) and onto other organisations – such as StreetGames, Parkrun and Sported – which might be able to deliver better results.

Tracey Crouch has said she will “rip up” the existing strategy. Crouch said: “I want to make sure that the sports sector gives everybody – no matter who they are and what their ability – the chance to take part. “Public funding is a privilege not a right and has to go to the organisations that can make a real difference.”

Since her appointment in May, Crouch has made it clear that a new strategy is at the heart of the government’s plans for sport. She has previously said the current strategy is not delivering and is not fit for purpose.

Taxpayer bill for West Ham stadium move

The British taxpayer will be footing a large chunk of the bill for West Ham United’s tenancy at the £700m Olympic Stadium in London starting next year, with the public authority that owns the stadium revealing details of the rental agreement.

Following a Freedom of Information request from the BBC, the London Legacy Development Corporation (LLDC) – the public authority that owns the stadium – revealed that the Premier League club will get their new home almost rent free, with a large number of facilities and services paid for by the grantor – meaning the taxpayer rather than West Ham.

Included under facilities and services are cost of stadium utilities, security, pitch maintenance and more. In addition, costs of overheads not included, such as stewarding and policing on match days, could also be paid by the LLDC, a figure which costs most Premier League clubs hundreds of thousands of pounds.

West Ham is understood to be paying around £2.5m a year in rent, with the services covered amounting to a similar figure.

“Our agreement with the LLDC will see West Ham make a substantial capital contribution towards the conversion works of a stadium on top of a multi-million pound annual usage fee, a share of food and catering sales, plus provide extra value to the naming rights agreement,” said a West Ham statement. Snowsport event for Olympic Park

London’s Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park will host the UK’s largest-ever snowsport and music festival in November of this year.

Freeze Big Air will see more than 60 of the world’s best snowboarders and skiers compete in a number of disciplines – including taking on a huge real snow jump created out of 360 tonnes of snow.

Olympic bronze medalist Jenny Jones has been confirmed as an ambassador for the festival, which takes place on 14 November and is part of UK Sport’s National Lottery-funded major events programme.

As snowboard big air is likely to become an official Olympic event at the 2018 Winter Olympics, the London Freeze Big Air will be seen as one of the most important qualifiers on the calendar in the lead up to the 2018 Games held in South Korea.

This means that the event in London is likely to attract the best riders in the world to battle for crucial qualification points. Freeze Big Air is being organised by event firm Vision Nine, in partnership with the Mayor of London, UK Sport and British Ski & Snowboard. Simon Morton, director of major events at UK Sport, said the show is a “massive boost for winter sport in Great Britain; showcasing some of the world’s most exciting winter sport athletes.” Details: http://lei.sr?a=X6Z2s_O

Bath Rugby stadium plans receive boost

Plans to build a new rugby stadium on the historic Recreation Ground site in Bath, Somerset, are back on track following the overturning of a court order which would have limited the size of the development.

The Recreation Ground Trust (RGT) – which owns the land – was successful in its appeal to the Upper Tribunal against a previous decision which prevented it from being able to lease a larger footprint of “the Rec” to Bath Rugby.

In a statement, RGT said that the decision will mean that the stadium plans can now progress forward towards the next step.

“The trustees would like to thank the tribunal for the clarity of their judgement on this complex issue and for the guidance offered on the next steps required,” the statement said. “The appeal addressed a specific point of law around the status of the Recreation Ground and the judgement has clarified that in essence the land is to be used as a recreation ground for the public and can be managed by the trustees in a manner that will further this charitable objective.”

RGT is looking to lease more land to Bath Rugby than it currently occupies, paving the way for a larger 16,500 capacity stadium. The Recreation Ground stadium currently has a maximum capacity of 14,000. Bath Rugby’s average home attendance was 13,171 in 2014-15. A spokesperson for Bath Rugby said that the stadium project remains at the heart of the club’s future plans. Details: http://lei.sr?a=A7S8u_O
Inactivity can cause ‘rapid loss’ of muscle mass

Just two weeks of not using their legs causes young people to lose a third of their muscular strength, placing them on par with someone 40-50 years their senior, according to new research.

The University of Copenhagen study has shed fresh light on the dangers of not exercising. The findings conclude that a fortnight of inactivity also causes ‘rapid loss of muscle mass.’ The study – which sought to explore the impact of high inactivity caused by being injured or ill by immobilising a participant’s leg in a pad – also demonstrates the dangers of simply spending excessive amounts of time on the couch.

NHS ‘rationing’ blocking access to exercise referrals

Some obese and inactive NHS patients are unable to access public health initiatives designed to improve their wellbeing because budget cuts are causing these services to be rationed, according to the Royal Society for Public Health (RSPH).

The RSPH survey of public health workers revealed cuts are having a direct impact on frontline services seen as key to combatting Britain’s inactivity crisis such as weight management and exercise referral schemes.

“This snapshot suggests that funding cuts are beginning to bite and are having a direct impact on frontline services,” said Shirley Cramer, chief executive of RSPH.

A strategy which undermines prevention defies logic and is only storing up problems for the future, which will be amplified in terms of cost and impact to our nation’s health.

The physical activity sector has led the way in offering its exercise and weight management skills to facilitate GP referrals, however experts have identified a need to work more closely with frontline healthcare professionals to boost the effectiveness of referrals.

Total Fitness eyes acquisitions

Resurgent health club chain Total Fitness is bidding to drive growth through “opportunistic” acquisitions as the company continues its turnaround strategy.

Having hit hard times at the start of the decade, the business is currently 60 per cent of the way through an estimated £18.5m refurbishment of its estate (17 clubs and counting), which has so far seen membership increase from 76,000 to 90,000.

Private equity firm NorthEdge Capital recently backed a management buyout of Total Fitness with an investment of £11.5m and NorthEdge partner Ray Stenton has told Leisure Opportunities that the chain is looking to drive growth through a number of channels.

“The business has grown well with limited investment and there’s a real opportunity to build on that. There’ll be opportunistic new site openings based on acquisition – we’re looking at two or three possibilities at the moment,” said Stenton, who is also a non-executive director of Total Fitness.

Should selfies be banned in gyms?

Almost 40 per cent of health club users think that selfies should be banned in gyms, according to new research which reopens the debate surrounding photos and fitness.

The latest research from Les Mills found that while one quarter of gym users take in-club selfies, 39 per cent would them banned.

Fitness selfies – sometimes referred to as ‘fitspiration’ – have become a significant fixture on the social media landscape, accounting for a sizeable chunk of the 17 million selfies uploaded to social media websites each week.

Despite their popularity among sought-after youth demographics – and the fact that selfies often amount to free marketing for businesses – selfies and gyms have not always enjoyed a picture-perfect relationship. Selfies were revealed to be gym goers’ biggest pet peeve in a recent survey, which found 76 per cent of gym users cited selfies as the thing that most annoyed them during a workout.

But despite these setbacks, selfies continue to go from strength to strength on social media – particularly among young gym users – and many believe they should be embraced by gyms.

“We can’t escape selfie culture and who wants to; they’re a great way to share experiences with friends and family,” said Les Mills UK CEO Martin Franklin. “However, there’s a time and a place for them. Gym goers need to put in the hard graft and earn their bragging rights to be able to post their selfie with pride.”

Burrows bringing yoga to masses

Former First Sports Group chair and Nuffield Health Consumer Fitness MD Nick Burrows is trialling a new yoga concept, which he hopes will ‘demystify’ the discipline and help yoga appeal to the mass market.

Burrows, who has co-founded Wellbeing Yoga, is aiming to scale up the concept to a minimum of five studios across Essex and the home counties by 2017, having enjoyed initial success with the company’s first studio in Brentwood.

Housed in the studio space of a local fitness club, Wellbeing Yoga Brentwood offers a wide range of inclusive yoga classes and is run by MD Jessica Livingstone. A passionate yoga instructor with marketing savvy honed from her previous career in PR, Livingstone is an equal partner in Wellbeing Yoga, which she co-founded with Burrows late last year.

Pointing to the UK market’s tendency to adopt trends from the US, Livingstone and Burrows view the UK yoga market – estimated to be worth £760m annually – as having latent growth potential. Aiming to dispel some of the jargon and mystique which the pair feel have been a barrier to widespread yoga participation, Wellbeing Yoga hopes to bring yoga to the masses by offering a simple and engaging service.

“The key thing is recognising the things that create apprehension in customers, anticipating them and trying to provide an approach that makes it more inviting for customers to engage with what we’re offering,” said Burrows, who is harnessing his 25 years’ of leisure industry experience to provide strategic insights as non-executive chair. Swimming sites slip for third straight year

More than twice as many swimming pools have closed in Britain in the last 12 months as have opened, according to the 2015 State of the UK Swimming Industry Report.

The new report – which brings more bad news for the struggling swimming sector – reveals that the number of swimming sites in the UK fell 0.7 per cent over the twelve-month period to the end of March 2015, representing a third straight year of decline.

The report found that there are now 3,265 swimming sites in the UK, down from 3,287 last year, with private sites closing at a faster rate than public facilities. It was also highlighted that public pay and play fees have increased by 3 per cent over the last 12 months, adding another hurdle to participation.

Despite being the most popular participation sport in England – with more than 2.5 million adults taking part in 30 minutes of moderate intensity swimming at least once a week – swimming has lately been on the decline. The most recent Sport England figures showed 144,200 fewer people taking to the pool in the last six months and 390,700 fewer in the last year. The long term trend is also concerning, with 729,000 people stopping swimming in the last decade.

Despite the falling figures, the 2015 State of the UK Swimming Industry Report concludes that 84 per cent of the UK population lives within two miles of a public or privately owned swimming pool with some public access. Details: http://lei.sr?a=b3C6n_O

£36.7m waterpark project pushes ahead in Coventry

Coventry City Council has revealed plans for a £36.7m indoor waterpark in its city centre, with designs for the grand development by Faulkner Browns Architects and Water Technology Inc (WTI).

The UK development will include a mix of race slides, flumes, wave pools, rapids and wet play equipment. Newcastle-based Faulkner Browns are also developing the wider leisure centre, which will include a 25m (82ft) swimming pool, a gym, climbing wall, squash courts, health suites, dance studio and a spa.

The new facility will replace Coventry’s existing Grade II-listed 1966 central swimming pool, which will close once the new structure opens in 2019. Work on the designs is already underway, with contributions also coming from Appleyard and Trew, who are acting as surveyors and project managers; Desco, who are offering mechanical and engineering services; and Engenuiti, who are handling structural engineering.

The council has forecast 1.3 million people will visit the new centre on an annual basis.

New Eden Project secures £150m fund

Eco-champion Sir Tim Smit’s proposal for his ‘Ark’ project, planned to be a centrepiece for Devon as a second Eden Project in the UK, has secured the £150m needed to fund development.

According to Smit, the “money is in place” for Eden Westwood, which would comprise a tourism and leisure complex near Tiverton in Devon, focusing on the “key strengths and attributes” of the county. The majority of funding for the project has been pledged by the insurance company Friends Life.

The Ark structure would sit at the heart of the Eden Westwood development, housing an interactive and experimental educational facility showcasing Devon produce. In addition, the plans include a surf lake and beach, hotel, regional visitor centre and a designer outlet shopping village. The proposal has been submitted to Mid Devon District Council for inclusion in its draft 2013-2033 Local Plan.

“Tim Smit has high hopes for the Eden Westwood complex

We believe that such a site can create a lens through which Devon can be seen as a world leader in the agricultural arena and that of sustainable construction, retail and tourism,” said Smit. “I truly believe that we can create the world’s most attractive and unusual visitor information centre, something which will help to actively promote businesses throughout Devon.”

Rock’n'rollercoasters at Thorpe Park

Combining the thrills and spills of the resort’s rides with the buzz of live music, Thorpe Park is hoping to crank up the volume on its gate receipts this summer through new music event Island Beats.

The event features ticketed headline acts on Fridays and Saturdays, as well as free live music from emerging artists. Tickets are £25 to see a headline concert or just an extra £10 on a standard ticket allows guests to have the winning combination of both rollercoasters and live music.

Acts that have performed so far have included The Vamps, who were a sell-out success, and Ella Eyre, who drew in crowds despite a deluge of rain. There have also been performances from Professor Green and DJ Fresh, while solo star Conor Maynard is due to perform on 21 August. Since becoming partners with events company Showcase Live in 2014, Thorpe Park has hosted other music shows prior to Island Beats, but on a smaller scale.

With such well-known and youth-orientated acts performing throughout the summer holidays this year, Island Beats is proving an interesting way to reach new audiences and drive business at the theme park.

Thorpe Park has also teamed up with hair salon Headmasters for Island Beats, with guests able to have their hair styled for free on Fridays and Saturdays – ensuring the style-conscious visitors won’t have to endure post-rollercoaster hair disasters for too long.

Five-star hotel for Great Scotland Yard

Great Scotland Yard, the famous former headquarters of London’s police force where criminals such as Jack the Ripper were investigated, is to become a five-star hotel having been bought by Indian billionaire Yusuffali Kader.

As part of the £110m deal, developer Galliard Homes will sell the historic property to Kader’s retail, hospitality and property conglomerate Lulu Group International once it has carried out a ‘lavish’ £50m refurbishment. Scheduled to open in Q1 2017, the hotel will be operated Steigenberger Hotel Group and will be known as The Great Scotland Yard.

The refurbished 92,000sq ft (8,547sq m) hotel will feature luxury bedrooms costing up to £10,000 per night, bars, restaurants, a library and a host of private dining and meeting suites. An adjoining Grade II-Listed Victorian townhouse will be incorporated into the hotel and will be used to create an entertaining suite.

The completed hotel will be seven-storeys high with two basement levels. It will retain the grand Edwardian Imperial red brick and stone facade with arched main entrance, ornate pediment and tall windows with feature brick and stone detailing. The interior design, to be led by Martin Brudnizki Design Studio, will be “contemporary and stylish, providing a modern compliment to the Edwardian architecture.”

“This will be one of London’s most luxurious 5-star hotels and one of Whitehall’s largest projects,” said Don O’Sullivan, MD of Galliard Homes. Details: http://lei.sr?a=s9Tz2c_O

London set for Indie Hotel Show

The Independent Hotel Show will be returning to London’s Olympia from 20-21 October for its fourth consecutive year.

The show, which launched in 2012, attracts independent hoteliers and industry professionals. Over the course of the two days, guests will have access to free-to-attend seminars where they can hear industry innovators tackle some of the sector’s most talked about topics.

In addition, more than 300 exhibitors from across the hotel supply chain will be in attendance, showcasing essentials that operators require to run a successful hotel.

Organisers say this year’s show promises to be “bigger and better” with a number of new features, including an expanded Destination Spa area, dedicated to hotel spas. As well as giving attendees access to suppliers from the health and wellness sector, the area will also offer spa business sessions featuring industry insights and ideas.

New for 2015, the show will also be launching the Independent Think Tank. The aim of this is to provide a dynamic space that brings together the movers and shakers of the hotel sector to debate key issues and evaluate sector opportunities. Throughout the two days it will host a schedule of smaller, more in-depth, focused workshops allowing attendees the opportunity to ask questions and actively engage with the content. Major new spa set for Boringdon Hall hotel

Boringdon Hall will open a multi-million pound spa development in the midst of Dartmoor’s rugged moorland.

The 1,700sq m (18,299sq ft) Gaia Spa, set to open in Q2 2016, is named after the Greek goddess of the earth, and will “set the benchmark for innovative treatments focusing on health and wellbeing,” the company said.

Gaia Spa will house 12 treatment rooms (including two doubles), a deep relaxation area, heat treatment facilities, a gym, a 14m (46ft) swimming pool, a thermal pool for hydrotherapy and the Spatisserie restaurant. The spa will also offer open-air treatments in the surrounding meadows for a unique sensory experience.

The new spa, designed by Plymouth-based Design Development architects, is a strikingly modern building constructed of glass, wood and stone that was inspired by the surrounding moorland. The hotel itself is steeped in history; housed in a manor house that Henry VIII gifted to one of his most favoured courtiers, it features Elizabethan architecture, imposing stone towers, secret archways and curious arrow slits. Nevertheless, the company said the modern spa will harmonise with the hotel’s Elizabethan architecture.

The spa, to be managed in-house by Boringdon’s sister company Gaia Spa, will use its own brand of natural products.

TOURISM

NI taps into Game of Thrones set

With Northern Ireland on a continued push of the Game of Thrones brand as a means to increase tourism in the country, officials are calling for the set of the show’s ice wall to be turned into a permanent visitor attraction.

In reality a disused cement works in County Antrim, The Wall – a 300 mile (483km) ice wall which separates Westeros from the north’s Wildlings, White Walkers and giants – is a key part of the books and television series.

Local councillors have asked show producer HBO to leave the set behind once filming is completed so the site can be used as part of its ongoing Game of Thrones tourism drive. The site would work particularly well as a tourist attraction as there are already plans in place to carry out a wider development of the area for recreation once filming is complete.

“To have the set there would be the icing on the cake,” said East Antrim MP, Sammy Wilson. “It is a magnificent site and it would be a massive tourist attraction. The number of buses and people who stop to try and get a view of it is an indication of that.” Tourism Ireland teamed up with HBO and Game of Thrones, in April for a 14-week campaign to promote Northern Ireland around the world in 2015, drawing fans of the series to the country to see the signature sites. Among the sites fans can visit, Northern Ireland includes The Iron Islands (Ballintoy Harbour), The Stormlands (Cushendun Caves), The King’s Road (Dark Hedges), Winterfell (Castle Ward) and Robb Stark’s Camp (Audley’s Field).

Northern Ireland’s tourist board offers a prominent rundown on the filming locations and where to find them on its website. Details: http://lei.sr?r=a=z6k2C_O

Tube strikes a ‘nightmare’ for tourism

The London Underground strike which paralysed much of the capital’s transport network on 6 August was likely to have a major impact on tourism businesses, according to one of the industry’s most senior figures.

Ufi Ibrahim, who is CEO of The British Hospitality Association (BHA) has said the 24-hour action against plans for an all-night tube service on weekends was a “nightmare” for tourism and said businesses would be significantly affected.

Tube workers are concerned that running an all-night service will be detrimental to work/life balance and require extra hours on weekends. There have been reports that unions will “escalate action” as the scheduled start date for the service (12 September) approaches, but Ibrahim believes the strike action should be called off.

“London’s economy is heavily reliant on its fast and reliable public transport network to move around the capital’s residents, tourists and visitors,” she said. “Strike action especially during busy summer months is a real nightmare for our hotel, restaurant and visitor attraction members who have to maintain high standards while facing the staff shortages and unpredictable customer footfall resulting from the transport challenges.”

Work set to start on £16m Warrington leisure hub

A £16m neighbourhood hub designed to provide leisure, health and cultural services in Great Sankey, Warrington, has been given the green light by planning officials.

Warrington Borough councillors unanimously agreed on 5 August to approve operator LiveWire’s proposal to transform the existing Great Sankey Leisure Centre into a multi-purpose community hub.

The centre will feature a range of leisure facilities and is envisioned to provide residents with a one-stop-shop for all leisure, health and wellbeing and cultural needs.

A LiveWire spokesperson told Leisure Opportunities that the contract to supply the planned 120-station gym will be put out to tender. The site will also feature swimming pools, a sports hall, tennis courts, a 3G pitch, GP surgeries, a library, a cafe and wellbeing facilities including a spa. Construction on the first stage of the development will start later this year, with phase one opening in Q3 2016.

Council green lights two new stadiums for Truro

Separate plans to build two new stadiums in Truro have cleared a major hurdle after both plans were approved by Cornwall Council’s strategic planning committee.

The council gave the go-ahead for a 6,000-capacity ‘Stadium for Cornwall’ – providing a new home to the Cornish Pirates rugby team – and a 4,000-seat ground for National League South’s Truro City Football Club. The developers of the Stadium for Cornwall at West Langarth can now begin a search for firms willing to take up the retail units that will help to fund the £10m ground.

Cornish Pirates have been working in partnership with property developer Inox Group on the stadium project and the club hopes to move into the new stadium for the 2017-18 season. Truro City meanwhile, has already secured enough funding to begin project building work.

Ingels’ Tesla coil dream for Battersea

Bjarke Ingels has unveiled plans to turn the chimneys at Battersea Power Station into giant sparkling Tesla coils, powered by passing pedestrians.

Ingels’ architectural practice, BIG, is designing the public square next to the iconic London building on behalf of Malaysian consortium, SP Setia, which is developing the power station site with Frank Gehry-designed flower shaped apartment blocks and luxury flats from Sir Norman Foster.

The two level Malaysia Square will guide visitors through the landscape and create a ‘calm and elegant entry’ to the Battersea Park Station.

Ingels has said he wants the square to be an urban medium for cultural expression, where landscape, architecture, urbanism and media design are in harmony.

It will be conceived as an urban amphitheatre for public, and spontaneous, performances. Both Malaysian stone grains and reclaimed power station chimney material will be used. Ingels recently told an audience at the Royal Academy in London, that they are speaking to experts in Tesla coils to see how these could be incorporated into the chimneys. The square could feature a piezoelectric pavement that stores energy as people walk over it, which could be released as an electric arc passing between the chimneys.

“We imagine it like Big Ben, when the clock strikes the hour, we can have this celebration of human energy and human life,” said Ingels. Details: http://lei.sr?a=x3Q2V_O

New London cycling bridge proposals

Active commuting in London could get a major boost after a number of designs were revealed for a new £40m pedestrian and cycle bridge across the Thames between Pimlico and Nine Elms.

Active design has been a hot topic in recent months, especially in light of new research that found cities which strive to promote physical activity gain a significant economic advantage. A study from cycling charity Sustrans, meanwhile, found that the UK’s National Cycle Network has saved the economy more than £7bn since it was established 20 years ago.

Wandsworth Council, which is running a design competition for the new London bridge, has unveiled proposals from the four architecture and engineering teams which have been shortlisted for the contest. One of the challenges for the teams – picked from a field of 74 entrants – is to create a bridge which is high enough for boats to pass under, but not too steep for pedestrians and cyclists to climb. The bridge is seen as a key part of a major infrastructure package that is in place to transform and regenerate the Nine Elms district, with the crossing offering a car-free alternative that would boost active commuting.

“We now have some very exciting and quite spectacular designs on the table,” said Ravi Govindia, leader of Wandsworth Council. “There’s still a long way to go but these teams have given us hope that a solution can be found to the complex challenges involved in creating a new pedestrian and cycle link.” Details: http://lei.sr?a=R8e8x_O

TRAINING

Symcox named new director of IQL UK

The Royal Life Saving Society (RLSS UK) has announced Martin Symcox as the new director of its training subsidiary, IQL UK.

Symcox has overseen IQL UK as interim director since January 2014, when former director Tara Dillon was seconded to CIMSPA.

Symcox joined IQL UK in 2009 as business development manager and has played a key role in ensuring the delivery of products and services. Over the last 12 months, Symcox has overseen the introduction of IQL UK's full suite of first aid qualifications, which has enjoyed promising uptake from the industry.

“I've been involved in the leisure industry since graduating in 1997 and having worked in numerous operational environments, I've know the importance of relationship management and delivering a consistently high level of service," said Symcox. "I'm looking forward to bringing my commercial experience to the new role and helping strengthen IQL UK's position in the aquatic training and safety market.”

IQL UK, which provides professional lifeguard training to around 95 per cent of the country’s pool lifeguards, hopes Symcox can help raise the profile of the organisation drive standards through the delivery of its National Pool Lifeguard Qualification (NPLQ) and National Pool Management Qualification (NPMQ).

Marriott, Wales Uni launch hotel degree

In a world first, Marriott Hotels has partnered with the University of Wales Trinity Saint David to introduce a two-year degree in international hotel management within the school of tourism and hospitality, with the first intake of students starting this September.

Students on the course will spend four month blocks alternating between academic lectures at the University and gaining real life skills and experience at the Swansea Marriott Hotel. The partnership allows the opportunity for training tailored specifically towards employer's priorities.

Marriott will offer in-house training for the students to acquire skills and experience across all areas, starting with food and beverage, front of house and eventually shadowing staff in managerial or financial capacities.

Michael Downie, general manager of Swansea Marriott, said: “As soon as we were presented with the concept of a joint venture degree between Marriott and the University of Wales, we could see it was a fantastic opportunity to use Marriott as a platform to train students on tailored courses which would make them very well equipped to enter the marketplace.

“This degree is a one of a kind at the moment,” he continued, “but it could be taken further within the UK and worldwide.”

Downie also said that Marriott plans to recruit top performing students from the course onto its Voyage graduate training programme.

Record slide to circle Orbit Tower

The Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park, which was home of the London 2012 Olympic Games, has confirmed plans to build the world’s tallest and longest slide inside the ArcelorMittal Orbit tower. Due to open to the public in Q1 2016, the 180m (590ft) helter skelter by Bblur Architects will start 76m (249 ft) above the ground, circling the tower five times before a 50m (164ft) straight run at the bottom. The slide will include transparent sections so riders can look at the view of the surrounding Olympic Park as they descend. The tower itself has been somewhat controversial, receiving a largely negative public response to its potential both as a visitor attraction and because of its industrial look. Designed by Turner-Prize winning artist Sir Anish Kapoor and Cecil Balmond of engineering Group Arup, the £19.1m, 114.5m (376ft) tall sculpture and observation tower is Britain’s largest piece of public art.

“What more exciting way to descend the ArcelorMittal Orbit than on the world’s longest and tallest tunnel slide,” said Peter Tudor, director of visitor services at the park. “This slide really will give a different perspective of Britain’s tallest sculpture. “We are committed to ensuring our visitors have the best possible day out every time they visit, and as with all our venues, we are constantly exploring ways to ensure we lead the way with the latest visitor experience.”

The innovative project follows a recently-commissioned pair of slides allowing visitors to travel from the Hayward Gallery’s iconic glass pyramid ceiling to the entrance level. Details: http://lei.sr?r=P2J2N_O

How One Direction work out on tour

When a large part of your job consists of energetic stage performances and fleeing screaming fans, it’s essential you stay in shape. To that end, global megastars One Direction have enlisted the services of celebrity PT Mark Jarvis and Jordan Fitness to keep in peak condition on their current world tour.

Known to be fans of functional fitness, Louis, Niall, Harry and Liam will be put through their paces as Jarvis utilises the full range of Jordan Fitness functional kit. Ideal for a speedy workout in the midst of a packed schedule, the band will have use of Kettlebells, Battle Ropes, PowerWave Crosstrainers, Slam Balls and Powerbands.

“You don’t need a gym full of equipment to train correctly. Jordan Fitness has an ideal range of functional equipment that does just that,” said Jarvis, who has trained Keira Knightley and Nicolas Cage. “The Jordan equipment I train One Direction and 5 Seconds of Summer on is ideal to travel with and can be used in a variety of workouts. I can train the guys in a dressing room, backstage or in a car park. Details: http://lei.sr?r=a=n7q7Y_O
