John Glen has said that rising tourism numbers in the UK will continue to grow after its exit from the European Union (EU), adding that it is in the “common interest” of Europe to make Britain accessible.

In an exclusive interview with Leisure Opportunities, Glen – who was appointed minister for Arts, Heritage and Tourism at the Department for Digital, Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) in June – said that the increase in inbound visitor numbers was continuing through 2017, and that there was no reason to believe the trend wouldn’t continue after Britain leaves the EU.

“We want the UK to emerge from this period of change stronger, fairer, more united and more outward-looking than ever before as a truly global Britain,” he said.

“While it was a vote to leave the EU, it was not a vote to leave Europe. Europe benefits from access to the UK market, and many parts of Europe benefit hugely from the business and tourism that comes from the UK. We have a common interest in getting the best possible outcome in terms of Brexit.

“Tourism will continue to be a major economic driver for the UK and will only grow in importance in the years ahead. The sector plays an important role in showing the world the very best of Britain, strengthening global relationships and demonstrating that we are open for business.”

Dame Vera Lynn backs urgent £1m plea to preserve White Cliffs of Dover

Dame Vera Lynn has backed an urgent call to raise £1m (US$1.3m, €1.1m) before the end of the month in order to fund the purchase of “iconic land” on Dover’s White Cliffs, amid fears the parcel could be picked up by property developers.

Overlooking the English Channel towards France, the White Cliffs act as a gateway to Britain and played an important part in the nation’s military history, with the cliff tops still home to installations and defences from the Second World War.

With a deadline of 22 September, the iconic heritage site is at risk should the National Trust – which currently manages the five mile range of chalk cliffs – not be able to purchase the 700,000sq m (7.5m sq ft) land parcel.

Dame Vera, who this year turned 100 and in 1942 famously sang “The White Cliffs of Dover”, threw her weight behind the appeal, saying the cliffs represented British ideals.

“Those iconic white cliffs mean a great deal to so many people,” she said.

“They were often the first sight of home for our brave boys as they returned from war, and they continue to represent important British ideals such as hope and resilience even in the most difficult times.

“It is vital that we do all that we can to preserve this important historical site, as well as the Cross Channel battery, for posterity so that the memory of the past is never forgotten by future generations.”

The new position is a promotion for Brown, who moves into the top office currently manages the five mile range of chalk cliffs – not be able to purchase the 700,000sq m (7.5m sq ft) land parcel.

Brown previously worked as RFU’s chief officer of business operations.

Jon Johnston transforms Matrix into a £40m company

“"We will be focusing on growing successful partnerships between suppliers”"

Jon Johnston launches two new fitness firms

Industry veteran Jon Johnston, formerly managing director of Matrix Fitness, today announced the launch of two new businesses, Reiver Fitness and Headroom Sport Ltd.

Reiver Fitness will distribute a number of innovative fitness product lines to gym operators and PTs, while Headroom will offer consulting services to the industry.

Johnston said Reiver will focus on providing a route to market for innovative fitness and sports products. He told Health Club Management: “The aim is to be agile and fast-moving, reflecting the speed with which the market is changing, growing and diversifying.”

Johnston is working with functional fitness equipment brands Stealth, Reaxing, SmartFit and Musclesound. He said: “We will be focusing on growing successful partnerships between suppliers, innovators and distributors.”

He’s also involved with a range of entrepreneurial ventures, such as pop-up spinning events featuring live DJs, the first of which took place at Bestival, with more to come in London.

Johnston was a founding director of Matrix Fitness and left the business after a successful 10 year stint at the helm.
Commonwealth Games chief Paul Blanchard backs Birmingham for bid

“We felt that Birmingham was just a stronger bid, and that it had the best chance in the international competition,” said Paul Blanchard, CEO of Commonwealth Games England, as he explains how the city came to be chosen as the preferred candidate for the UK’s bid to host the 2022 Commonwealth Games.

It had been a close race against Liverpool, however it was Birmingham that was finally chosen by an independent assessment panel, in partnership with officials from the Department for Digital, Culture, Media and Sport. Blanchard, who sat on the panel, says that the two cities were assessed on 20 criteria, which included venues, proposed sports programmes, infrastructure, transport, technology and athletes’ village plans.

“The government will make a decision on whether they believe the 2022 Games will be value for money”

It will now be up to the government to decide whether to submit an official bid to the Commonwealth Games Federation.

“The government will make a decision on whether they believe it’s value for money. They’ll assess the budget that’s being put forward, plus the economic impact and many other variables,” Blanchard said.

Xtreme Boot Camps appoints former cagefighter Alex Reid as visiting trainer

Xtreme Boot Camps, a spin-off the independently-owned Xtreme Gyms, has signed up former mixed martial arts (MMA) fighter and celebrity Alex Reid as a visiting trainer.

The winner of the 2010 edition of Celebrity Big Brother – who established himself as one of the UK’s most popular MMA fighters during a 16-year career – will join the Xtreme team immediately and will take part at the next boot camp in October.

The week-long Xtreme Boot Camps – held at the Malvern St. James School in Worcestershire – consist of daily training regimes, combining gym-based workouts with intensive outdoor fitness activities.

Xtreme Boot Camps was set up in October 2013 by mother and son team, Zoe and James Evans – who also run the Xtreme Gym in Stratford-upon-Avon.

Reid has recently developed a fat burning, toning and combat workout system based on MMA conditioning, which he is currently rolling out across gyms in London. The programme will now feature at the boot camps.

James Evans, co-founder and trainer at Xtreme Boot Camps, said: “Alex will be joining the team and using his martial arts skills to add a new dimension to the training.”

Commenting on the partnership, Reid said: “My main passions and interests have always been in wellbeing and longevity and of course to help people change their lives.”
Engineer Alan Bennett enters Britain into space tourism race

Britain has taken a big step in the space tourism race, with private firm Starchaser Industries successfully launching its first test flight of a reusable rocket.

Funded and built by the Manchester-based company, the 8.2m (27ft) Skybolt 2 test model was launched in Northumberland, where the carbon-fibre rocket reached 4,000ft (1,219m) before successfully coming back down to earth.

The rocket launch is a significant step towards the development of rockets for use in space tourism in the future, though Starchaser has stiff competition, with the likes of Space X and Virgin Galactic making significant strides towards the goal of an operating space tourism industry.

“One of the things we want to do is make space tourism a reality, we want to be launching people into space and this rocket was carrying various systems and experiments that will allow us to do that,” said Starchaser managing director Alan Bennett, speaking to The Guardian.

In addition to its primary goal of creating a rocket capable of transporting people to and from space, the plan is to also use Skybolt 2 for education purposes – including school visits around the UK.

“We want to make space tourism a reality, we want to be launching people into space”
TRIB3 set to open in Leeds and Moscow

TRIB3 has added two studios to its portfolio, with the opening of a 4,500sq ft (418sq m) club in Leeds, West Yorkshire, and the boutique gym’s first European site in the Russian capital of Moscow.

The Leeds studio, which has space for 36 people, will feature lighting created by Lightmasters, with cardio equipment provided by Star Track. It will also feature Safe Space lockers and MYZONE technology.

Sheffield company Ovo Spaces has fitted out the studio.

TRIB3, which has three studios in Sheffield, announced earlier this year that it was planning to open its first overseas site in Moscow.

The 5,000sq ft (465sq m) studio is part of its continued growth, with a gym in Barcelona, Spain, set to follow in January.

“Our main goal is to secure the European market and our openings in Leeds and Moscow, with Barcelona to follow in early 2018, we are well on target to meet our goals,” said TRIB3 chief executive Kevin Yates.

Founded by Yates, Dan Summerson and David Cross, the TRIB3 concept is based on HIIT workouts.

GLL invests £3.4m in Cardiff leisure centres

Greenwich Leisure Limited (GLL) has begun the first phase of a £3.4m (US$4.5m, €3.8m) investment project to improve four leisure facilities it operates in Cardiff, Wales.

The Welsh council appointed an external partner to manage its centres due to local authority cuts.

Health scheme helps Essex patients get active

A health programme that prescribes exercise as medicine has helped more than 1,700 patients in Essex to become physically active.

The Let’s Get Moving (LGM) scheme - run by ukactive in conjunction with Active Essex - targets patients in need of activity interventions, giving them the tools and confidence to develop positive lifestyle habits and meet people.

ukactive has been delivering the plan in the county for more than two years, with research showing that participants showed an average 75 per cent increase in physical activity levels by the end of the programme.

Thirteen GP surgeries across Essex have taken part in the scheme, which uses motivational interviewing techniques by community exercise professionals to give patients the inspiration and opportunity to get active.

The intervention offers 12 weeks of support, which includes appointments with an exercise professional.

Les Mills and Alliance join forces to drive participation

Leisure development company Alliance Leisure and group exercise specialist Les Mills UK are working together in partnership to help operators install facilities that can help drive participation in communal physical activity.

By combining their expertise and research, the two companies are focused on adopting a holistic approach to facility development, providing solutions for both the physical building and studio programming to help motivate users.

Hambleton set for £2.5m revamp

Work is set to begin on a £2.5m redevelopment of Hambleton Leisure Centre in Northallerton, North Yorkshire.

Facility development specialist Alliance Leisure – which is leading the six-month project – has appointed contractor ISG to undertake the work, which will result in a new 5,100sq ft (473sq m) extension.

The new complex will house a new health club and toning area, with the current gym space being converted into group exercise studios, including an immersive indoor cycling studio.

New energy-efficient lighting will also be installed in the sports hall and the timber sprung floor will be upgraded.

The refurbishment of the existing centre will include repair and upgrade works to the existing water slides, flumes and wave machine in the pool area. The changing facilities will also be upgraded with the addition of a new members’ change area.

“Our team will be working in a live environment,” said Andy McLinden, managing director of ISG’s UK Construction North and Scotland business.

“We’ve had an agreement with Alliance Leisure since 2010, built around Sport England’s need to engage people in fitness initiatives.”

Classroom exercise helps combat childhood inactivity

Exercise videos in school classrooms could be a cost-effective solution to help introduce more physical activity into schools, an American Council on Exercise (ACE) study has concluded.

Research, supported by ACE and performed by Dr Leon Greene at the University of Kansas Department of Health, Sport and Exercise Sciences, involved 16 teachers and more than 400 students in second, third, fourth and fifth grade classes.

PE teachers helped researchers design eight exercise videos targeted at each age group. The students exercised with 10-minute videos up to twice a day for one month. After four weeks of up to two video exercise sessions per day, students were more active and, according to the teachers, better behaved.

“Daily movement will help lead kids to better health,” said ACE chief science officer Cedric X Bryant.

Harriersons plan community-led stadium

Kidderminster Harriers football club has submitted a proposal to the Wyre Forest District Council to build a new stadium, with facilities to benefit the town’s local community.

The National League North side is planning to prematurely end the lease on its current ground – the club’s home since 1890 – allowing the council to redevelop it into housing.

Plans for the new venue would encompass a new, purpose-built stadium for Kidderminster Harriers, as well as a large training complex. In addition, the site would feature artificial pitches open to the public and educational facilities for all age groups. The proposed new site would be located across the town at the Centre of Sporting Excellence, which is already home to the club’s football academy and the first team’s training pitches.

There has been some push back from fans against the decision, but Harriers chair Colin Gordon stated his believes that the move is necessary.

“The simple fact of the matter is that we cannot be at the heart of our community if we’re sat in the middle of a housing estate,” he said.

“On a Saturday afternoon we want the entire town to come and watch us play.”

Championship rugby clubs launch grassroots initiative

Professional clubs playing in the second tier of English rugby have signed up to a grassroots rugby development programme, which will see a selection of players from each club go out and help their local communities.

The Supporters’ Support scheme will see Championship clubs announce on social media dates and times that players will be available to help out with a local project.

All club fans are encouraged to make their case via social media for the cause they feel is most in need of help.

The clubs will then choose a project to help with from all of the responses and their players will get involved.

Funded by the Championship’s title sponsor, Greene King brewery, the Supporters’ Supporter scheme is part of a wider strategy to grow rugby union at grassroots level.

Worcester seeking new investors to combat losses

The club hasn’t set a deadline for finding the right investor

Bill Bolsover, Warriors chair

The English Aviva Premiership rugby club Worcester Warriors has confirmed it is looking for fresh investment, following reports that the club has lost more than £15m over the past three seasons.

In a statement, Warriors chair Bill Bolsover said that the introduction of a new investor could ultimately lead to a change of ownership.

The majority share in the club is currently held by Sixways Holdings.

Speaking on behalf of Sixways, Bolsover said: “The club can confirm it is always seeking further investment to support our existing shareholders and to ensure that the club continues to compete at the highest level in the years ahead.

“This is part of our ongoing strategy and we are committed to finding the right partner to help take the club forward. The club has not set any deadlines on finding the right investor.”

As we enter the last quarter of 2017, I am delighted to welcome Sport England’s latest pledge of support for CIMSPA, which further strengthens the partnership between our two organisations. This, together with the backing we receive from the DCMS, will allow us to resource and service our members through education products. It will also allow us to drive the agenda at pace and all but complete our work on the professional standards matrix by the end of March 2018. To achieve something that the sector has been talking about for 30 years in just 18 months will be quite an accomplishment, and is down to the support we enjoy from Sport England and the sector.

Standard practice

We’ve enjoyed extremely positive engagement with the government agency’s head of coaching, Stuart Armstrong, in the development of our coaching professional development standards. As a result of this, the standards will be written and published by the end of the year.

Workforce strategy

Sport England has appointed Caroline Fraser to the new role of workforce development director. With a successful background in retail and the NHS, Caroline has a wealth of experience in people management and clearly understands the importance of professionalising the sector.

Caroline has worked within the sphere of chartered institutes before and is passionate about bringing credibility and status to our sector in line with CIMSPA’s goals.

I very much look forward to working with Caroline and Sport England’s workforce strategy, which is due to published later this year.

New recruits

Finally, I’m pleased to announce that CIMSPA is recruiting across a number of roles in education, communications, membership and partnership services. We are looking for people who are passionate about shaping our sport and physical activity workforce to tackle the UK’s inactivity crisis. Watch this space.

Macdonald teams up with Elemis

UK-based independent hotel group Macdonald Hotels & Resorts is continuing to invest in its wellness offering with the launch of a career pathway for its spa staff.

As part of a strategy to identify, train and retain key spa workers, the group has introduced the Spa Career Development Plan, designed to provide staff with access to structured support and a programme of continued professional development.

Spa staff will be able to benefit from a tailor-made careers programme, which has been constructed in cooperation with UK-based product house Elemis and its Academy of Excellence. Each participant’s programme will be designed based on their specific needs and level of experience across six positions, ranging from apprentice spa therapist to regional spa manager.

“Our Spa Career Development Plan clearly outlines the support available and formalises the training schemes provided by our product houses.”

Clubbercise expands with instructor course

UK-based dance fitness brand Clubbercise has launched an instructor training course in Australia.

Nine students passed the first course and can now teach classes in the country. The course was led by master trainer Jade Purdie, who has been running Clubbercise sessions in Melbourne, Victoria since December 2016.

Some of the instructors who attended the course were from gym chains Fernwood Fitness and Genesis Fitness, which launched Clubbercise to its members in July.

“The reception we’ve received has been incredible,” said Claire Burlison Green, Clubbercise founder.

Clubbercise classes see participants workout with glow sticks in a darkened room with disco lighting.

Swimming Nature takes advantage of teacher shortage

Independent swimming tuition provider Swimming Nature has continued its drive for growth by securing contracts for the use of 15 additional pools.

The deals – which include pools operated by hotel groups Q Hotels, Hilton and Jurys Inn, as well as a selection of premium independent locations – have widened Swimming Nature’s network in the UK by 40 per cent.

Swimming Nature’s expansion comes amidst a shortage of swimming teachers and lifeguards in the UK.

The acute lack of swimming teachers means that half of 11-year-olds in the UK can’t swim 25 metres, while a lifeguard shortage is forcing swimming pools to limit opening hours.

Eduardo Ferré, CEO of Swimming Nature, said: “Our goal is to grow the number of students we teach per week to 20,000 over the next three years.”

Swimming Nature’s business development director Michael Clark added: “What’s unique about our service is that it can work independently or augment existing provision. “We often find that operators aren’t maximising their aquatic real estate and we are a great partner to help them enhance their overall consumer experience and create a revenue stream that is low-maintenance and high-return.”

NEW HOTEL

Luxury hotel included in Newcastle plan

Plans for a multi-million pound hotel complex complete with a rooftop swimming pool, nightclub, restaurants and retail outlets have been unveiled for Newcastle city centre.

Local firm Space Architects are designing the scheme, which will encompass nine existing neoclassical buildings – seven of which are Grade II listed – along the city’s Grey Street.

The studio has been tasked with creating a new visitor attraction for the North East region, while making sure their design is sympathetic the historic façades of the street.

Director David Coundon said: “We’re very excited at the scale and ambition of this project. It allows us to deliver an important restoration project for the city, generating new luxury facilities that will attract visitors and locals alike.”

Leisure operator Malhotra Group PLC – which also owns the neighbouring Grey Street Hotel – is overseeing the £35m development, and plans to build a 20 bedroom, four star deluxe hotel at its heart.

The project also includes the site of the city’s original Theatre Royal – which will become home to a number of retail outlets within a glass covered cobbled street.

A recent TV news VoxPop on sports policy threw up insights into government priorities. Seasoned Westminster parliamentarians commented: “It’s tough for sport to get a look in against big issues like Brexit, the NHS, social care crisis, youth crime and mental health.”

Such words reinforced the view that physical activity sits in a box in Westminster entitled “DCMS”, from which it shouldn’t stray and look to influence other issues which aren’t its business (i.e. the grown-up stuff), so what should our sector do about this?

Making the case
One of the great things about National Fitness Day (NFD) – to be held on 27th September this year – is that it allows people to celebrate their personal relationship with activity and fitness. The breadth of stories captured – covering issues of mental wellbeing, loneliness, active ageing, young people’s behaviour and educational success – are some of the most powerful testimonials for the work the physical activity sector does, and a barometer of its importance to society.

It seems the public is ahead of many of our elected representatives on this issue, having a greater feel for the value of physical activity across our lives.

Furthermore, you just have to look at the major brands now aligned with physical activity to fully see the sector’s relevance.

The ambition to support the sector is there within Westminster, and the vision set out in Tracey Crouch’s Sporting Futures strategy champions the role of physical activity in society, yet despite the hard work of a great team at DCMS who live and breathe this agenda, I suspect the document is gathering dust in too many other government departments.

Exciting initiatives
However, there are exceptions which we are excited to support. Firstly the Ministry of Justice is seeking to strengthen the use of physical activity in achieving positive outcomes for adult offenders and young people in the justice system. Secondly the Department of Work and Pensions is working with ukactive – in work led by disabilities minister Penny Mordaunt MP – to encourage more disabled people to engage with the physical activity sector, for the benefit of both.

That said, our agenda needs to fully break out of its Westminster box so all government departments understand and implement programmes that harness the value of physical activity. We know from our campaigns like NFD that the impact of activity defies categorisation, so we must continue to challenge the government to embrace its full potential.

It seems the public is ahead of many of our elected representatives in government when it comes to appreciating the value of physical activity.
Sadiq Khan has set out his tourism vision for the UK capital through to 2025, with the London mayor eyeing significant increases in tourism and revenue thanks to the newly-laid out industry masterplan.

Headed up by London & Partners (L&P), the tourism plan forecasts a 30 per cent increase in international and domestic visits to 42.6 million visitors annually, with a projected spending jump of 50 per cent to £22bn (US$28.4bn, €23.9bn).

“The benefit visitors bring to the city is huge – around one in one in seven of London’s workforce are employed directly or indirectly by the tourism sector – and this is an industry that provides opportunities to people at every stage of a career, from entry level jobs to senior management,” said Khan.

“This vision to progress London’s position as a global capital for tourism sets out a clear direction for London’s tourism sector, identifying where future growth will come from and the real opportunity we have to harness and manage that growth.”

China and India will be key markets in the vision, with Chinese visitor numbers expected to double by 2025 and Indian visitors to increase by 90 per cent.

“More than 100 industry partners are involved with the plan,” Sadiq Khan, mayor of London

The campaign will use overseas social media influencers and travellers to showcase to their peers the “amazing moments and experiences that can only be had on a holiday at home in the UK”.

“We want to inspire more young people to take in our world-class attractions, sites and cities,” said tourism minister John Glen.

One million visit City of Culture museums

Hull’s museums, including the Ferens Art Gallery, the Hull History Centre and the Arctic Corsair trawler have recorded more than one million visitors since January, the highest figure since records began in 1960.

According to the City Council, the busiest day for Hull’s museums was on 21 January where a total of 12,805 people visited the cultural attractions.

Hull was awarded the City of Culture in 2013 and has redeveloped a number of its cultural draws in the intermittent period, including a £5.2m (US$6.7m, €5.6m) renovation for the Ferens Art Gallery, which was selected to host this year’s Turner Prize. The figure, which shows the success that the title of City of Culture can bring, also included Wilberforce House, the Hull and East Riding Museum, Streetlife Museum of Transport, Spurn Lightship, Hull Maritime Museum, and the Hands on Museum.

“We are delighted that such large numbers of people have visited our museums and art gallery during our year as the UK’s City of Culture,” said Hull City councillor and portfolio holder for Leisure and Tourism, Terry Geraghty.

“Reaching one million visitors acknowledges the quality of our exhibitions.”

Thorpe Park confirms, The Walking Dead for Fright Nights

Earlier this year Thorpe Park promised to “up the ante” in the lead up to Halloween, and the operator has delivered, confirming plans to bring global IP The Walking Dead to the park for its popular Fright Night events.

In an exclusive deal with US television network AMC, two new live-action attractions based on the globally-renowned series will debut in the lead up to the premier of the show’s eighth season, which returns on 23 October.

“This is a gamechanger for Thorpe Park,” said Dominic Jones, divisional director for Thorpe Park.

“We’re really upping our game for Fright Nights 2017. This is one of the world’s strongest IPs and we’re pleased to bring it to the masses.”

The new attractions will both be horror mazes, one indoor and one outdoor.

Inspiring Science Fund hands out £13m

Five science centres in the UK are to receive a combined £13m in funding to encourage new and different ideas that will help to make science more accessible to the general public.

Newcastle’s International Centre for Life has been awarded £2.6m, which will be used to create new exhibitions and a programme of science engagement initiatives with community groups in the region.

At-Bristol, soon to relaunch as We The Curious, will receive £3m with a new aim to “create a culture of curiosity” as a “multi-disciplinary space where science and culture collide and collaborate.”

Finally in Northern Ireland, Belfast’s W5 will receive £3m to create new immersive exhibition areas and experiences.

The fund offers the opportunity to develop meaningful engagement with underserved and underrepresented audiences.

UK arts threatened by £39m cut to British Council funding

An open letter penned to Boris Johnson, Britain’s secretary of state for foreign affairs, has called on the minister to reconsider funding cuts which would force the British Council to scale back its work in developed countries, significantly affecting the UK’s culture sector.

If the decision to cut its funding – made before Britain’s decision to leave the European Union was decided – goes ahead, it will be reduced from £39m in 2016/17 to zero by 2019/20.

Penned by William Burdett-Couts – artistic director for theatre and comedy promotion company Assembly, and signed by 14 other heads of major culture projects in the UK – the open letter urges Johnson to reconsider the Council cuts so it can maintain its culture standards in what will be an important time for the UK ahead of Brexit.

What are the key factors that energy procurement managers should be considering today, and how can British Gas help?

At British Gas Business we encourage businesses to consider ‘three pillars’ when it comes to their energy supply. The first step is to help them review what supply product they are on and to buy more wisely.

Some of our customers like to see how the market changes, and buy when it’s favourable. Others like the security of budgeting for a fixed price for the longer term. Fortunately, at British Gas Business, our range of tariffs suits both strategies. Fixed price contracts for up to five years help businesses budget, while flexible contracts give them more control over their energy spend. Some prefer a hybrid model with our blended contracts.

Secondly, operators need the right tools to help them use energy more wisely. Access to reliable consumption and invoicing data is incredibly important when making decisions about their estate. All our business supply contracts offer the option for automatic meter reading and an online energy management portal.

Using insights gained from intelligent data monitoring, we use live demand profiles to identify consumption trends and recommend areas where savings can be made.

Thirdly, we can help identify what options and assets are available for on-site generation, helping businesses avoid costs at peak periods and even generate income.

What does British Gas Business see as the main energy challenges for leisure operators?

Operators should ensure their energy strategy allows them options on how to purchase their energy and monitor usage.

Non-commodity costs currently make up around half of a business’s energy bill, and industry forecasts suggest this could increase to nearly 60 per cent. With a large proportion of energy expenses being incurred between 4-7pm, the way to avoid these costs is to not use energy from the grid.

Clearly these are peak times for leisure operators so shutting down is not an option, but by utilising technology from a Distributed Energy (DE) solution, the costs can be avoided.
This is through solutions such as combined heat and power (CHP), allowing electricity and heat to be generated on site with the use of a gas intake boiler. Electricity can also be produced at different times, charged to an on-site battery, and then discharged during peak hours.

Can you explain more about the Distributed Energy concept and why it’s important for businesses?

Distributed Energy represents a shift away from the traditional model of large power stations feeding electricity into the National Grid and on to local distribution networks. It’s a world where smaller generation sites join forces with battery storage, energy efficiency and smart building management systems, all managed from a single energy control centre.

The concept can apply to both multi-site businesses and single site operators within the corporate energy sector, so it’s extremely relevant for the leisure and health club sectors.

Our aim is to help businesses and other large energy users take control of their energy by giving them the power to operate, monitor, and optimise their energy assets.

Centrica recently acquired Panoramic Power. What does this bring to the portfolio?

Panoramic Power was acquired by Centrica to complement our DE strategy. Combined with cloud-based analytics, the wireless sensor technology allows customers to obtain valuable insight into their energy usage – beyond the meter consumption and down to appliance level.

It’s managed online or through mobile apps, and provides real-time energy usage data on circuits or elements of buildings e.g. certain floors or rooms.

It will enable operators to identify inefficient equipment and potentially predict breakdowns before they happen; therefore mitigating potential downtime or valuable space being used for temporary generators.

What part does a company’s energy policy play in managing their brand reputation?

As natural energy sources deplete and we become more reliable on new, greener technologies, organisations can use energy to boost their CSR credentials and therefore their brand reputation. By embracing the future world now, exploring the wider energy strategy around DE and adopting some of the technologies, they will be able to state their CSR credentials in this space and their support for the UK energy infrastructure long term.

Kaylë Burgham began working in the leisure industry as a lifeguard when she was 15 years old. She joined Swimming Teachers Association (STA) in 2011 as the technical support officer for swimming, and has recently been named head of aquatics at the company.

What drew you to the leisure industry?
“I have always loved swimming and working with children. When I started to assist with lessons I saw first hand how much enjoyment children and adults alike got from learning to swim. I then understood the importance of learning to swim and the life skill it is – and fully appreciated how important the role of a swimming teacher was. The more involved I got, the more I fell in love with teaching and swimming, and the more I knew I wanted to do this as a career.”

What is your favourite part of your job?
“There are so many parts. I enjoy working with like-minded professionals to develop high quality aquatic qualifications and seeing them successfully come to life in the pool. I have been incredibly lucky to have been given opportunities to travel the world and meet with many leading experts across a range of aquatic specialisms, from baby swimming to adult and disability swimming. I especially enjoy learning from people who share my love of swimming, and exploring the different emotional and psychological aspects of teaching so we as aquatic professionals can give our learners the most enjoyable learn to swim experience.”

What are your goals?
“I am passionate about promoting the benefits, and importance of learning to swim in a learner-focussed environment. I want to share this passion to inspire a new generation of aquatic professionals, and use my experience to shape future standards. No one once told me to think wisely about the company you’re working for as they hold the key to your future. If they are constantly on the move, forward thinking and fun to work for, that allows you to grow with them.

Proud Moments
“One of my proudest moments was launching the STA Level 3 Diploma in Aquatic Teaching – Baby and Pre-School qualification last year. I got to stand next to people who I respect and was classed as a leading expert in baby swimming.” Knowing years of research, teaching and hard work has amounted to me being considered as in the same league as them was a proud moment.”

AECOM to oversee multi-million-pound Center Parcs-style activity resort in Wales

A major adventure resort offering a wide variety of physical, thrilling and wellness activities, a 100-bedroom hotel and 400 luxury lodges on a 480-acre (194-hectare) Welsh site will be project managed by AECOM.

Afan Valley Adventure Resort will offer a mix of healthy and exhilarating pastimes, including water sports, mountain biking, survival training, trampolining, surfing and zorbing, in response to rising demand for British holidays with a stronger emphasis on being active outdoors.

The project is the brainchild of Peter Moore, one of the team behind the launch of Center Parcs in the UK in 1987, and Gavin Woodhouse, chair of Northern Powerhouse Developments.

The latter firm has appointed AECOM to deliver project management, cost consultancy and wider multi-disciplinary services on the £130m project.

“The appointment of AECOM as project managers of the Afan Valley Adventure Resort is a decision we believe provides yet another tried and tested company working on our common goal,” said Woodhouse. “Years of research and planning have now culminated in what we feel will be an amazing experience for our guests. The active lifestyle resort, which is expected to create 1,000 full time jobs, is divided into a number of themes, such as alpine, forest, trails, Zen and “Xtreme”, and will boast – among other things – ski slopes, an aqua adventure park, ice skating, gyms, steam rooms and saunas, zip wires, indoor climbing walls, Laser Quest, a soft play centre, a virtual reality centre, BMX and skate parks, aqua caving, an equestrian centre, bars, restaurants and retail outlets.

English Premier League club Arsenal has launched an innovation lab as part of plans to work closer with startup organisations.

The Arsenal Innovation Lab will enable the club to partner with entrepreneurial businesses in order to explore – and improve – areas such as matchday experience and fan engagement.

It will also use the lab to find innovative ways to "transform commercial partners’ offering" and "build a retail operation for the future".

As well as working with startups in football-related fields, the lab will offer companies a "wildcard" option – giving an opportunity to anyone to come forward with ideas, whatever their focus, to help take the club forward.

Following an application period, successful candidates will be mentored by senior business leaders from the club, and have the opportunity to test and demonstrate products or services in live environments as well as the potential for investment.

“We know there are many brilliant startup companies with creative and innovative ideas and we are looking forward to working with them,” said Vinai Venkatesham, Arsenal’s chief commercial officer.

“The club has always placed a big emphasis on being pioneering and innovative and we plan to continue this by working with smart-thinking businesses to help us identify ground-breaking ideas”

“Applications are now open for Arsenal Innovation Lab’s first 10-week programme, which will be run in collaboration with corporate innovation specialist L Marks.

“Though based in London, Arsenal has global support which presents amazing opportunities for new businesses working on digital fan engagement and other relevant solutions to work with the club,” said Stuart Marks, chair of L Marks.
