Franchise deals heat up fitness market

The UK’s franchised fitness market is growing, with two operators aiming to strengthen their footholds in the industry after signing multi-site deals with franchisees.

US-based Orangetheory has signed a master franchise deal for the North and Midlands, covering an area from Buckinghamshire to Northumberland.

The studios will be operated by Wellcomm Health and Fitness, a company set up for the venture by a group of entrepreneurs led by chair Mike Dixon and CEO Alistair Firth. They are joined by two non-executive partners, Debra Martin and Colin Wright.

Firth said talks are at an advanced stage for the three first sites and the group aims to have at least two open during 2018. “We’ll confirm the first site within the next month or so,” he said.

Meanwhile, 24-hour gym franchise Snap Fitness UK has announced plans for 34 more clubs in 2018, after opening six new sites in the first week of the year. The mid-market brand more than doubled its presence last year, reaching 44 locations by December, up from 21 at the start of 2017. The expansion began in 2015 with only five clubs.

Snap Fitness CEO Isaac Buchanan said: “There are no signs of us slowing down during 2018 and our growth is largely driven by our franchisees.”

Katherine Grainger, chair of UK Sport, has suggested a rethink of the funding system for British sport, from grassroots to elite level.

Grainger told an audience of sports governing bodies, clubs and charities that the current system is “challenging”.

“All sports have different structures and different pathways of how athletes come into their sport, whether it’s university-fed, club-fed or whether it’s from a young age. I slightly naively thought there must be some way to clarify all these pathways from grassroots stuff to high-performance sport so there’s a more natural flow, but it’s so much more complex than that.”

Grainger was speaking at the Fit for the Future Convention hosted by Sport and Recreation Alliance recently.

She said: “There’s a massive challenge: in an ideal world, how could you align all sports so there’s a real structure so as many people get involved as possible? “We don’t want or need everyone to get into sport purely to be successful at the top, but the ones that do want to progress need an obvious pathway to go through.”

Great sports coaches will be celebrated in the UK’s first dedicated Coaching Week, to be held in June.

UK Coaching has announced that related events will be held across England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland between 4 and 10 June.

Backing the campaign, Paralympic swimming champion Ollie Hynd said: “I wouldn’t be where I am today without the help of coaching.

“Throughout my journey as an athlete, from grassroots to elite level, coaches have helped me across all elements of my life to allow me to develop and become the person I am today.”

The campaign is supported by national governing bodies for sport and is invited people to share examples of great experiences. It will focus on the impact of coaching on mental and physical wellbeing. Recent figures show that more than nine million adults in the UK received coaching over the past 12 months.

Emma Atkins, director of coaching at UK Coaching, said: “We’re very excited to be able to launch such an exciting campaign and ensure coaching across the UK is rightly celebrated.

“The exciting part of this campaign is to hear from the public about what they feel great coaching is for them. “For coaching to be great it primarily must meet our own motivations, which in turn allows us to utilise sport and physical activity to benefit and in many cases, transform our lives.”

DCMS head of sport Andrew Honeyman says sector will play “important role” post-Brexit

The Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) is driving for the sports and physical activity sector to have an important role in the government’s Industrial Strategy post-Brexit, according to its head of sport, Andrew Honeyman.

Speaking at ‘The Future of Leisure’*, on 31 January, Honeyman said the DCMS’ Sports Business Council – launched last year – has raised the question over whether the sector should have its own sector-specific deal in the strategy.

“We have a half an eye on what happens post-Brexit,” Honeyman said. “And we’re starting to have discussions in the [Sports Business] Council and consider the role that the sport and physical activity sector can play.

“Marshalling those arguments [regarding sport] into the debate would be of huge value and we feel that there are potentially some interesting outcomes in the future.”

Honeyman said the sector could play a “crucial role” in solving some of the challenges outlined in the Industrial Strategy – launched in November 2017 to buttress the UK economy ahead of the fallout from Brexit.

“We have a half an eye on what happens post-Brexit. We’re starting to have discussions in the Sports Business Council and consider the role that sport can play"
Bear Grylls plans to ‘bring adventure to millions’ with new survival attraction

Celebrity survivalist Bear Grylls has said that he wants visitors to “bring adventure to millions”, with the launch of his new adventure attraction in Birmingham, UK, later this year.

Targeting the adventure-based experiences market, the £20m (US$26.7m, €22.8m) Bear Grylls Adventure attraction being developed by Merlin Entertainments will be split up into five areas, with each offering a different set of activities based on Grylls’ high adrenaline experiences and past expeditions.

“I wanted to create a large scale attraction so you don’t have to travel the world to get a real taste of adventure,” said Grylls.

“We found during market research that 18 per cent of the British population rarely get to do anything outside of their comfort zone. With Bear Grylls Adventure, we’re here to help change that.”

In October last year, Merlin CEO Nick Varney revealed plans to further expand the adventure concept, taking the Bear Grylls brand overseas in a major attractions rollout, with likely destinations including the US and China. The Birmingham park will be the first to open.

Dr James Steele to lead ukactive Research Institute ukactive has named Dr James Steele as its new principal investigator – a role which will see him lead the ukactive Research Institute.

Steele’s appointment comes as the institute is undertaking a ground-breaking project on the impact of exercise referral schemes to inform future practice.

He will also continue as associate professor of sports and exercise science at Southampton Solent University – providing a link between university-based academic work and the real-world intervention studies of the institute.

“As someone who has studied and worked in exercise science for the past decade, I have seen the ukactive Research Institute grow in prominence as the go-to bridge between academia and industry,” Steele said.

“Together, we can support the research, development and innovation that we need to get more people, more active, more often.”

The new role follows Steele’s appointment to the Chief Medical Officer’s Expert Working Group for Physical Activity, which is responsible for the review of the UK physical activity guidelines.

Six Expert Working Groups will each cover a different age range, and Steele has been appointed to the Expert Working Group for Adults.

The group will provide recommendations to the UK chief medical officers for physical activity guidelines for those aged between 19 and 64. The current UK physical activity guidelines for adults – 150 minutes of moderate physical activity a week – were published by the CMOs in 2011.

Formed in 2012, the ukactive Research Institute aims to build an evidence base for the use of exercise and physical activity programmes in the improvement of quality of life, and the prevention and management of disease.
Michael Mosley to headline first Elevate Conference team

Journalist and presenter Dr Michael Mosley has been announced as a keynote speaker for this year’s inaugural Elevate Conference in London. Mosley, who presents The Truth About Exercise and Trust Me, I’m a Doctor, joins a lineup including minister for sport Tracey Crouch, Virgin Active UK managing director Robert Cook and public health expert Muir Gray, as part of the two-day event at ExCeL London from 9 to 10 May.

The speakers will lead the new thought leadership conference at Elevate, billed as the UK’s largest physical activity event. “The physical activity sector is gathering huge momentum in terms of government support, media coverage and increased consumer engagement,” said Max Quittenton, founder and director of Elevate.

“The inaugural Elevate Conference will challenge the sector to fulfil this potential, outlining an ambitious vision for its role in society. Influential speakers will assess the evidence, analyse the current state of play and present the opportunities.”

Speakers will explore themes from social prescribing to open data and digital disruption to community-wide change. The event will feature about 200 suppliers, showcasing products designed to get people more active.

ACQUISITIONS

JD Gyms acquires Ben Dunne Gyms UK

The UK division of Ben Dunne Gyms has been acquired by JD Gyms in a multi-million-pound deal.

JD Gyms, part of JD Sports Fashion group, has closed the three sites for a full redesign, refurbishment and relaunch.

The sites – one in Manchester city centre and two near Liverpool city centre – will reopen as JD Gyms from mid-February onwards.

“This exciting acquisition helps to fuel our wider growth plans,” said Alun Peacock, managing director of JD Gyms.

“Our first acquisition is a milestone in the development of the brand and we’re open to approaches from independent gyms or small chains that would help to further grow our expanding portfolio.”

Peacock first revealed the expansion plans in an interview with Health Club Management in August last year.

After strong organic growth in 2017, the acquisition will see JD Gyms reach 19 operational gyms by the end of Q1, with a further 10 sites to open within the 2018-19 financial year.

While the exact figure for the deal has not been disclosed, the low-cost operator will invest an average of £2m on each fit-out.

REDEVELOPMENT

Roehampton Club completes £4m upgrade

Roehampton Club, a multi-sport members’ club in south-west London, has completed the redevelopment of its health club’s outdoor pool, gym and studios.

The year-long refurbishment was part of a two-phase, £4m redevelopment programme, designed to “better reflect the premium positioning” of the club.

Phase one saw the upgrading of the existing outdoor pool to allow swimming all year round, while the second phase included a redesign of the health club and studios.

“The works have given us an attractive family-friendly outdoor pool plus two more dedicated exercise studios for spinning, yoga and pilates,” said Marc Newey, CEO of Roehampton Club. “Combine that with the new décor and we have a new gym and studios to be very proud of.”

Brain-boosting exercise builds immune system

The link between a sound body and mind has been demonstrated by scientists in a groundbreaking new study on the impact of exercise.

Researchers from Karolinska Institutet in Sweden found that the same mechanisms behind the beneficial effects of exercise training on the brain also help counteract fat and strengthen the immune system.

Jorge Ruas, principal investigator at the Department of Physiology and Pharmacology at Karolinska Institutet, said: "Our research adds to the understanding of why exercise training benefits the body and in the long-run can lead to the development of new treatments for obesity or diabetes."

The research examined the function of kynurenic acid, following an initial study in 2014 which identified the beneficial effect of exercise training on the brain.

Light exercise linked to lower mortality rates

Even low-levels of regular physical activity can lead to lower death rates among older women, research has concluded.

As part of a Women’s Health Initiative study in the US, researchers wanted to learn more about how much exercise older adults are able to perform, and how it affects their health.

During 2012 and 2013, 6,489 women aged between 63 and 99 years old joined the study, agreeing to take in-home exams, answer health questionnaires and wear accelerometers to measure physical activity and sedentary time, as well as keeping sleep logs.

After examining the deaths of the women according to their activity levels, the researchers concluded that physical activity was both associated with lower mortality in older women.

"The finding for lower mortality risk associated with light intensity activity truly is remarkable," said Mike LaMonte, the lead author.

Sport England funds low income exercise

Sport England has announced new funding for community groups which help people on low incomes become more physically active.

A total of 26 projects have been given up to £10,000 each, with activities ranging from ‘Dad Dancing’ exercise sessions to cricket and badminton lessons for refugees.

Other projects to receive funding include The Booth Centre Sports Programme in Manchester, which will offer free sports sessions to the homeless, and the Community Renewal Programme in Newham, which will provide fitness sessions for ethnic minority women who do not currently exercise.

According to Sport England figures, physical inactivity (doing less than 30 minutes of moderate exercise a week) among people on a low income is twice that of people on a high income.

Sport England executive director, Mike Diaper, said: “We know that people on a low income can face many pressures which make it difficult for them to be as active as they would like to be.

“We’re working with community-focused organisations across the country to find ways to help people fit physical activity into their lives in ways that work for them.”

Private Surrey health club launches Hot Yoga Club

The Thames Club in Staines, Surrey, has added a dedicated hot yoga studio to its offering as part of plans to establish the independently-owned club as a yoga and pilates destination.

Launched this month, the 100sq m (1,076sq ft) studio will be marketed as The Hot Yoga Club and will be offered as a standalone membership, with pay as you go options also available.

The instructor training and class schedules at the new club will be driven by hot yoga pioneer Amanda Free, who has been credited with being the first person to bring the discipline to the UK in 1995.

"Initial feedback has been incredibly positive. In our first week we secured more than 600 bookings, with all classes achieving at least 80 per cent capacity," said Peter Williams, managing director at The Thames Club.

A ‘floating’ ice rink has opened in Romford as part of a new £28m leisure centre built to improve sports and fitness facilities in the area.

Sapphire Ice & Leisure, operated by Everyone Active, marks Havering Council’s largest single investment in a borough-wide improvement programme and will become the new home of the London Raiders ice hockey team.

The floating rink – meaning one built above the ground floor – can be found above an eight-lane, 25-metre swimming pool.

It has the capacity for 1,200 skaters and rink-side seating for up to 1,000 spectators. The centre, constructed by Willmott Dixon and named after the sapphire reign of Queen Elizabeth II, also features a learner pool with an adjustable floor and a 100-station fitness suite.

“This is a really exciting development for the area of Havering and we’re proud to bring such top-class facilities to the community,” said Duncan Jefford, regional director of Everyone Active.

Council leader Roger Ramsey added: “It’s an honour to open this long-awaited facility.

“I hope all residents across the borough make good use of this complex to help maintain and improve the health and wellbeing.”

Leicester City reveals plans for £80m training ground

2016 Premier League champion Leicester City Football Club (LCFC) has revealed plans to build an £80m training ground near Loughborough, Leicestershire.

The club has acquired 180 acres of land on the site of the former Park Hill Golf Club in Charnwood and the new centre will be designed by architects KSS.

The centre will include facilities for the club’s first team and development squad and will also support the club’s community programme.

Aiyawatt Srivaddhanaprabha, LCFC vice chair, said: “The club has experienced an extraordinary rate of growth in recent years. Keeping the local community at the heart of that growth has been and will continue to be a fundamental principle of our vision.”

Athletics World Cup to launch in London

British Athletics has announced that eight of the world’s top athletics nations will compete in the first Athletics World Cup in London this summer. Athletics World Cup London 2018 will take place at the London Stadium from 14 to 15 July, with the USS, Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Poland, China, Germany, France, Jamaica and South Africa competing for the inaugural World Cup Trophy.

Each nation will compete for a US$2m (£1.6m, £1.4m) prize pot over two evening sessions featuring all track and field athletics up to and including the 1,500m. The event mandates that all team captains must be female, in support of the mayor of London’s #BehindEveryGreatCity campaign for equality.

“This is one of the exciting innovative events we’re seeing in our sport, said IAAF president Sebastian Coe.

Water Babies to build and operate in Germany and China

Infant swimming school Water Babies has announced plans to open four new swim centres in the UK, Germany and China this year.

The franchise business, based in Devon, reached a weekly client base of more than 50,000 last year, with a business model heavily dependent on hiring pool space.

It is now looking to build and operate its own “premium facilities” to house Water Babies lessons, as well as aquanatal classes from sister company WaterBumps.

It has partnered with Italian pool building firm Myrtha Pools, which has constructed pools for the recent Olympic Games, World Championships and Commonwealth Games.

“This is a game-changing development for Water Babies and the infant swimming industry,” said Steve Franks, MD of Water Babies. “Partnering with Myrtha, we’re confident we’ll offer baby swimming lessons unrivalled in the world.”

De Leede and Kyricos to co-chair GWS

The Global Wellness Summit (GWS) has named fitness and wellness entrepreneur Tony de Leede and wellness consultant Mia Kyricos as co-chairs of this year’s event.

The annual summit – focused on the US$3.7tr (£2.65tr) global wellness economy – is set to take place from 6 to 8 October at the Technogym Village in Italy.

“I’m grateful for the talents and expertise that Tony and Mia will bring to curating an agenda that furthers conversations on the big business of wellness and embraces the heart of Italy’s lifestyle, including its art, fashion and food,” said Susie Ellis, GWS chair and CEO.

Tony de Leede, left, and Mia Kyricos, will chair the annual event

A successful fitness pioneer, de Leede built Australia’s biggest fitness empire, Fitness First. He is also a wellness resort entrepreneur who co-owns a range of wellness hospitality businesses, including the destination spa resort Gwinganna and the surf wellness brand Komune.

“The Global Wellness Summit is attended by the top wellness companies, investors, researchers and policy-makers in the world,” said de Leede.

“It’s an honour to be a part of an event that facilitates cooperation and encourages relationships that shape the business of wellness.”

GWI study reveals why ‘good-looking’ people have the edge

According to a report sponsored by the Global Wellness Institute (GWI), good-looking people receive many advantages in life: they are more likely to be hired, given more pay, receive lesser punishments, and are assumed to be more intelligent and trustworthy.

Conversely, a “disfigured-is-bad” bias can exist, and people with minor facial disfigurements may be judged negatively and perceived as having undesirable personality traits, such as emotional instability or laziness.

The report, Beauty2Wellness: Mitigating Barriers and Building Bridges, was conducted by Dr Anjan Chatterjee of the University of Pennsylvania.

“The link between beauty and wellness is not obvious, Chatterjee said. “An unhealthy preoccupation with beauty can emphasize a ‘beauty is good’ stereotype.”

Well+Good launches new division of retreats

Alexia Brue and Melissa Gelula, founders of lifestyle website Well+Good, have launched a division of retreats, designed to appeal to a new generation of wellness travellers.

At the Global Wellness Summit in October, Brue and Gelula presented findings from a survey they conducted that showed that 40 per cent of their readers – more than half of whom are millennials – would rather go on a fitness retreat with their favourite instructor than to a destination spa.

“These days, among millennials, it’s more brag-worthy to say that you’ve snagged a spot in Taryn Toomey’s DR retreat than it is to say you grabbed a spot at Canyon Ranch or Miraval,” Brue explained.

The first Well+Good Retreat taps into this trend and will be hosted by ‘self-care expert’ Candice Kumai (66.4k Instagram followers) and fitness and recovery influencer Charlee Atkins (18.6k Instagram followers).

Pullman launches new sleep programme

AccorHotels has partnered with Rythm, a neurotechnology company, in a pilot programme that brings Rythm’s wearable sleep tech product, Dreem, to guests at Pullman Paris Centre - Bercy and Pullman San Francisco.

Dreem is an active sleep solution designed to enhance sleep quality – a miniaturised headband uses ultra-fine sensors to track key information such as brain waves, heart rate and breathing, and discreetly diffuses sound to the inner ear. It claims to help users fall asleep more easily, enhance deep sleep and wake the user at the optimal time.

“Pullman is thrilled to have this amazing opportunity to work with Dreem, Rythm’s scientifically proven way of improving the quality of your sleep,” said Aldina Duarte Ramos, director of wellbeing for Sofitel, Pullman and Swissotel.

“A good night’s sleep is a cornerstone of Pullman’s wellness ethos,” she continued. “We promote it as a pillar of its renowned wellbeing programme based on sleep, food, sport and spa, which is at the heart of Pullman’s identity.”

Rythm is a neurotechnology company that has previously worked with partners such as the Stanford Center for Sleep Sciences to develop consumer electronic products.

REFURBISHMENT

ReardonSmith complete renovation of Adare Manor

Adare Manor, Country Limerick’s historic hotel and golf resort, has re-opened its doors after a multi-million-euro redevelopment, planned to establish a “new legacy” as Ireland’s leading luxury resort.

Led by ReardonSmith Architects, the large-scale project has included the creation of new buildings as well as the restoration and refurbishment of existing properties, joined by interconnecting spaces.

James Twomey, director of ReardonSmith Architects, said: “The redevelopment of Adare Manor into one of the finest golf resorts in Europe was a very special responsibility for the design team.

“Now, a new chapter is emerging for the estate as a destination that is contemporary, unique and world-class, while honouring its rich legacy.”

None of us likes receiving spam emails. Unwanted emails simply sit there unopened or are deleted automatically. Harmless enough? Not necessarily for the senders. Companies that do not respect the wishes of past, present or potential customers are already liable for fines, but the penalties are set to climb much higher thanks to the introduction of EU General Data Protection Regulations (GDPR) on 25 May.

A fine line
Morrisons, Honda, Flybe, Islington Council and Carphone Warehouse have recently been fined for either being careless with personal data or for sending millions of emails to people who had previously said they didn’t want to receive marketing messages.

Under the GDPR, which will replace the UK Data Protection Act, fines will jump from the current maximum of £500,000 or 1 per cent of annual turnover to €20m or 4 per cent of annual global turnover.

Last summer, pub chain JD Wetherspoon decided to delete its entire emailing list. Observers speculated that the group might have lost track of which customers had given consent to be emailed for marketing purposes.

With GDPR on the horizon, companies clearly feel increasingly uneasy about keeping large amounts of data of uncertain value. Wetherspoon chief executive John Hutson suggested that email was not an effective marketing method anyway because many consider it “intrusive.”

In order to be ready for GDPR, companies need to carefully go through all their data – check exactly what they and why they have it.

Companies will need to review their email practices due to GDPR.

GDPR: time for a data spring-clean

Be prepared
In order to be GDPR ready, companies need to carefully go through all of their data; check exactly what they have, why they have it, and what they need to do with it in order to be GDPR-compliant.

A hotel that has amassed the contact details of all its previous guests, for example, cannot send marketing messages to them unless it first has their permission.

The GDPR puts the onus on companies to actively seek specific permission from individuals to use their personal details such as emails, phone numbers and postal and IP addresses. Relying on pre-ticked boxes or inaction (ie not unsubscribing) will not constitute consent.

Increase in dementia-friendly tourism

The Scottish Government has been urged to create a register of accredited dementia-friendly attractions in the country to provide a boost to tourism and help families with members suffering from conditions such as Alzheimer’s.

Conservative MSP and shadow culture secretary Rachael Hamilton has launched a campaign calling for a national accreditation scheme, stating that such a programme would help open Scottish tourism to the 1.7 million dementia patients and their carers in the UK.

In addition to helping people and families dealing with such conditions, the creation of a register would encourage other businesses to improve their facilities, according to the MSP, positioning Scotland as a leading player as a dementia-friendly destination.

“The tourism industry in Scotland is more reliant on elderly customers than perhaps many people realise,” said Hamilton.

“The sector, like everyone else, has a role to play in improving the lives of these vulnerable patients, and this would be a good way to do it.”

In addition, Hamilton called on the government to help support businesses on measures to make their attraction more accessible for dementia sufferers.

VisitBritain launches ‘I Travel For’ campaign

“I Travel For” is the new message from VisitBritain, which this week launched its tourism campaign for 2018 in a bid to reach record inbound figures.

Using a series of short films and storytelling to highlight the country’s most popular landmarks and attractions, and some of Britain’s less explored destinations, the digital campaign will be promoted through social media between February and April to the UK’s largest and most valuable inbound visitor markets.

“By shining a spotlight and telling the stories of Britain’s exciting and contemporary culture, innovations in food and drink, the beauty of our countryside and vibrancy of our cities, we want to inspire even more international visitors to book a trip right now,” said VisitBritain chief Sally Balcombe.

By telling the stories of Britain, we want to inspire more visitors

Sally Balcombe
This year’s English Tourism Week is being held on 17-25 March 2018 and, as usual, presents an opportunity for the tourism industry to highlight the benefits that tourism delivers for the local, regional and national economy.

Working on a deal
Highlighting the size and important of the Tourism Industry is particularly important this year as we work to develop and implement a Tourism Industry Deal under the Government’s new Industrial Strategy.

This deal will help support tourism businesses in a post Brexit environment by addressing long-standing issues such as the need for skilled workers, lengthening the tourism season and improving productivity. The deal which have been developed by the industry working through VisitBritain is now being considered by Government and the support of local MPs who recognise the value of tourism to their constituency will be important to obtaining Government’s agreement to implement.

So, how do you become involved in English Tourism Week. The starting point is to have a look at the ETW18 website www.visitbritain.org/english-tourism-week. This will provide you with a range of ideas and opportunities to take part in this event including a toolkit of logos and posters to help you brand your events, activities or offers. There is also an ETW Events platform where you can register your event or offer so that that it’s promoted across VisitEngland’s consumer website and social channels, as well as to media, trade, MPs and industry. You can also use the hashtag #ETW18 on social media to highlight your event and encourage your visitors, customers and even local residents to share their photos and experiences on social media through Twitter, Instagram and Linkedin.

The other important aspect of ETW is to invite your local MP to come and visit your business or event on 23rd March 2018. This is Tourism Constituency Day and the Tourism Alliance has written to all MPs in England inviting them to visit a local tourism business on that day so that they can show their support for the tourism industry and better understand the value of tourism. This is also your opportunity to highlight issues that are holding back growth of local businesses. So contact your local MP’s office and ask them to visit your business that day. And if they agree, make sure that you let the local newspaper or radio station know as well.

We are working to develop and implement a Tourism Industry Deal under the government’s new Industrial Strategy.

REDEVELOPMENT

Portrait gallery set for £35.5m revamp

London’s National Portrait Gallery has appointed architecture firms Jamie Fobert and Purcell to deliver the British institution’s £35.5m transformation. Called ‘Inspiring People: Transforming our National Portrait Gallery,’ the plans from the London-based practices mark the largest ever development for the Victorian-era National Portrait Gallery since it opened in 1896.

The decision follows an international selection process to find the best candidates, with Jamie Fobert – who recently celebrated the opening of the £20m Tate St Ives redevelopment in Cornwall – leading the design process. The architects will work in conjunction with heritage experts Purcell, also working with engineers Max Fordham and Price & Myers on the plans.

“We were impressed by Jamie Fobert’s evident love of the gallery, its collection and building, and the clear vision he had for how to make the most of these for our visitors, as well as his affinity with art and artists,” said National Portrait Gallery director Dr Nicholas Cullinan.

Scheduled to start in 2020, the plans include an increase in exhibition space by 20 per cent. More: http://lei.sr?a=q3s4Y_O

MUSEUMS

Living Museum benefits from regional skills initiative

The Living Museum of the North in Beamish has taken advantage of a regional programme to offer its staff a series of courses designed to boost their skillsets.

Called Go>Grow the £10m scheme funded by the European Social Fund is headed by Gateshead College, which is tasked with delivering training courses to North East businesses wanting to develop workforces.

The training is supporting the ‘Remaking Beamish’ project – an £18m expansion featuring a reconstructed 1950s town.

“‘For a museum steeped in history, we’re very excited for the future,’” said Michelle Lagar, Remaking Beamish project officer. The museum had a record 750,406 visitors last year and was recently voted the Large Visitor Attraction of the Year. More: http://lei.sr?a=b6X3J_O
Frida Escobedo to design 2018 Serpentine Pavilion

Award-winning Mexican architect Frida Escobedo has been commissioned to design the 2018 iteration of the Serpentine Pavilion.

The Serpentine Pavilion programme, which began in 2000, sees an architect who has never built in the UK create a temporary summer pavilion and café space in Kensington Gardens.

Zaha Hadid, Herzog & de Meuron, Jean Nouvel, Sou Fujimoto and Bjarke Ingels Group are among the international architects to have previously taken part.

“My design for the Serpentine Pavilion 2018 will be a meeting of material and historical inspirations inseparable from the city of London itself,” said Escobedo, describing the project.

“It is based on an idea which has been central to our practice from the beginning: the expression of time in architecture through inventive use of everyday materials and simple forms.”

Welsh resort gets green light for £7m SkyDome

Bluestone National Park Resort has been granted planning permission for a huge transparent dome that will contain an amphitheatre and range of adventure activities.

The tourist attraction, in Pembrokeshire, Wales, is erecting the SkyDome to offer a variety of leisure options to its guests, including ropes courses and caving, cafés, shops and play areas.

The £7m dome, which is about 7,000sq m (75,347sq ft) and 116 metres tall, was provisionally approved by Pembrokeshire council.

A highly anticipated exhibition of Terracotta Warriors, carefully transported from China’s Shaanxi Province, launched in Liverpool on Friday 9 February.

The 2,000-year-old treasures, which depict an emperor’s army, have gone on display at the World Museum for the next eight months in an exhibit entitled China’s First Emperor and the Terracotta Warriors.

“The Terracotta Warriors exhibition is surely one of the most important exhibitions we’ve ever held here,” said David Fleming, director of National Museums Liverpool.

“We look forward to sharing this spectacular show with the city’s people and welcome visitors from across the UK to witness this unmissable opportunity to see some of the Terracotta Army up close.”

The terracotta statues show the army of Emperor Qin Shi Huang. More than 8,000 of them were buried alongside the emperor.

James Barter started working in the leisure industry as a lifeguard at Felixstowe Leisure Centre when he was 16. He has been working in the industry ever since, and now works as a senior software consultant for management software provider, Clubware.

Tell us about your career
“After university I started in membership sales for Pulse Fitness. Membership sales was great, but I’d completed a degree in sport and exercise and wanted to get into fitness instructing. I found a job in HiLife, a fitness club in Ipswich, where I was given the opportunity to troubleshoot one of their struggling clubs. I went from fitness instructor to club manager in just a few months. I then gained experience working as the deputy general manager, and then manager, of a health club in South London, before moving into the supplier side of things. My first supplier role was with Torex, now XN Leisure, where I trained people to use the leisure management software, TLMS. I then spent two years working with the Amateur Swimming Association on their Everyday Swim Project. After two years, I applied for a senior position within CheckFree, now Jonas Fitness. I worked at Jonas for eight years, and got to work with some of the industry’s biggest companies, including: David Lloyd and Xercise 4 Less. I was then headhunted by Transaction Services Group, to launch their leisure management software, Clubware, into the UK, and have been here ever since.”

What changes would you like to see?
“I think there is a real issue with staff being underpaid and under-trained. Customers expect high standards, regardless of cost, yet we expect the front-end service to be delivered by underpaid, under-trained staff who work long hours. In terms of industry changes, I think we’ve become far more tech-savvy. The industry is fast to adopt new ideas and isn’t afraid to try new things.”

Proud moments
“When I worked in Woking, I started free regular swimming sessions for Muslim women in the area. More recently I played an integral role in one of the largest software transformations that the UK health and fitness industry has ever seen. It took two years to plan, and involved more than 500,000 members and 114 gyms.”
Eden Project goes global

Eden Project signs deal for £150m Qingdao attraction

Sir Tim Smit’s Eden Project is making a giant leap to realising its first overseas attraction, following a trade meeting between the British and Chinese governments.

During the three-day trade mission to promote Prime Minister Theresa May’s vision for a “global Britain”, David Hardland, Eden Project chief executive, signed an agreement with Zhao Lintao of China Jinmao Holdings, setting out terms for a future development in Qingdao.

Including the design, construction and operation of the planned £150m (£US$213m, €170.8m) attraction, Eden Qingdao will follow the theme of water and will as its centrepiece feature the world’s largest indoor waterfall - roughly the same size as Niagara Falls at 50m (164ft) high.

“This is a huge development in the history of the Eden Project and the biggest step we have yet taken towards opening an Eden Project in China,” said Harland.

“We are very excited about the possibilities for this attraction and the city of Qingdao and are very pleased to be working with our friends and colleagues at China Jinmao Holdings.” Following the China launch, there are plans for multiple Eden Project attractions worldwide, with locations in Australia and New Zealand already confirmed. Four other Chinese projects are also in the works. Grimshaw Architects, creators of the original Eden Project, are working on the design for each of these proposals.

We are very excited about the possibilities for this attraction and the city of Qingdao.

In its first 16 years, the Eden Project attracted more than 19 million visitors and generated £1.7bn for the regional economy. In 2016/17, accounts showed a cash surplus from trading of more than £1.6m.

During 2016, four per cent more people than the previous year visited and, for the first time since 2011, Eden welcomed more than one million visitors in a 12-month period.

The Qingdao project is expected to break ground this year, with an opening date set for 2020. Further overseas projects in the Middle East and Asia are expected to be announced later this year.

This is a huge development in the history of the Eden Project

The second Eden Project in the world will be built in east China’s Shandong Province
Off piste, on track

Dramatic design unveiled for indoor Swindon ski centre inspired by railway heritage

Portraits and leisure specialists FaulknerBrowns Architects have submitted a planning application for a major new indoor snow centre and leisure destination in Swindon. Plans for the destination include a 2,000sq m (21,500sq ft) snow centre featuring two real-snow slopes; a 12-screen cinema with the largest IMAX screen in the UK; a bowling alley; an indoor trampolining centre; a 130-room hotel; and a variety of shops, bars and restaurants.

The scheme, earmarked as a priority by the council, will bring back into use former-industrial land to the north of Swindon town centre. The land, which sits adjacent to Oasis Leisure Centre, was previously occupied by the Great Western Railway Works – demolished almost a decade ago to make way for redevelopment.

The project is being developed by Seven Capital, and, if approved by Swindon Borough Council, it will become the seventh indoor slope in the UK.

Russ Davenport, FaulknerBrowns partner
In reference to this railway heritage, the design of the centre’s sweeping roof structure bears similarities with curved Victorian railway stations, such as Bristol Temple Meads a few stops down the track from Swindon. Enveloping steel columns, vertical brick piers and a two-storey brick arched base also echo this heritage, with the latter creating a framework for shops.

The two linear convergent slopes inside the building frame the corner of the site and form a backdrop for a circular rotunda, which contains restaurants with external ‘terraces’ on the ground floor and the multiplex cinema above. The main building and the rotunda are linked by a glass atrium.

This will bring a neglected site back into use and provide visitors with a memorable experience, both on and off the slopes.

- Russ Davenport

The centre will have two real-snow slopes; a twelve screen cinema; a bowling alley; an indoor trampolining centre; a hotel; shops and restaurants.
An Active Uprising

ukactive to replace Flame with new Active Uprising industry event

In recent years, our sector has evolved and expanded on a global scale into areas it never has before. Active Uprising will match these elevated ambitions.

Steven Ward, ukactive chief executive
Active Uprising looks to bring more than 1,000 industry leaders to a festival of insight, debate and action has before. Active Uprising will match these elevated ambitions with a revamped and expanded format.”

The schedule of events will include the Active Uprising Conference on 21 June, combining keynotes from leaders in business, politics and media.

Among the conference agenda will be the return of Ignite, a series of educational leadership workshops for fitness managers, designed to help them thrive in a rapidly changing sector.

Innovation and technology will also take centre stage with the culmination of the ActiveLab start-up accelerator programme. Now in its second year, the mentoring initiative aims to revolutionise the way physical activity is delivered by matching startups with leaders in business and the fitness industry.

The finalists of ActiveLab will battle it out at Manchester in a live-pitch competition, in front of an audience of 800 key influencers.

Also taking place during Uprising is Sweat North – bringing the London-based boutique fitness event to Greater Manchester – to discuss how the boutique fitness boom has become a national phenomenon, and exploring how other regions of Britain can become “boutique powerhouses”.

Meanwhile, the conference’s Active Communities strand will look to offer insight on the grassroots level, exploring programmes and investments transforming communities across the UK.

The ukactive Awards have also been revamped. Taking place on the evening of 21 June, there are a raft of new categories, widening the awards to celebrate achievements in all aspects of the physical activity sector.
