Growth in sport sector outpacing rest of the economy

By Tom Walker

Growth in the sport sector has outstripped the English economy as a whole over the past two decades, according to a report by Sport England.

The Economic Value of Sport in England, published on 14 August, suggests the sport economy’s annual contribution has reached £16.67bn, an increase of 140 per cent in real terms between 1985 and 2008.

The report also shows that a major factor in the sharp increase in announced developments in the past five years has been London’s successful bid to host the 2012 Olympic Games.

Growth between 2005 and 2008 was "driven by investment directed towards the London Olympics and a long-term Sport England policy to increase sport participation". The report, commissioned by Sport England and carried out by the Sport Industry Research Centre at Sheffield Hallam University, shows that consumer spend on sport in England was £17.384bn in 2008 – up 138 per cent since 1985.

The number of people with sport-related jobs has also grown, reaching 441,000 – accounting for 1.8 per cent of all employment in England.

More than 75 per cent of these jobs are in the commercial sector, with 13 per cent working in the public sector.

When comparing the value of the sport sectors across the country, London makes the largest total contribution, while per capita spending on sport is greatest in the east of England at £404.

September deadline set for prospective sports clubs to submit their proposals

By Pete Hayman

The Olympic Park Legacy Company (OPLC) has announced that all parties interested in securing a long-term lease to London's Olympic Stadium must submit their final bids by 30 September.

More than 100 initial expressions of interest were submitted before a deadline in an earlier stage of the process held between March and June, although the formal bidding stage still remains open to new proposals.

The OPLC chair Margaret Ford said: "The stadium is at the heart of the Olympic Park and securing the most appropriate solution is crucial to our long-term aspirations."

Cycle Xtra holiday initiative launches

The new scheme aims to encourage holidaymakers in Britain to take up cycling

By Tom Walker

A partnership including the Forestry Commission England, Hoseasons Holidays and CTC Charitable Trust is launching Cycle Xtra, a new scheme to encourage more holidaymakers to take up cycling.

It aims to utilise leisure destinations where cycling can be introduced to those who would otherwise not consider cycling in their daily lives.

Various cycling activities will be on offer at five Hoseasons holiday parks in England.

Each location has been selected based on its proximity to a Forestry Commission site with access to dedicated cycling routes and facilities.

The destinations are Finlake Holiday Lodges near Exeter, Oakdene Forest Park near Ringwood, Sherwood Castle Holiday Forest near Mansfield, Griffon Forest near York and Kielder near Newcastle.

There will be a dedicated Cycle Xtra officer at each site to offer holidaymakers a varied and entertaining programme.

Funding for the development of Cycle Xtra has come from Cycling England, a non-departmental public body funded by the Department for Transport.

Transport minister Norman Baker said: “Cycle Xtra is a good example of how community-based projects can make a positive contribution by changing mindsets and people’s travel habits.”

UK playground projects held up by spending cuts

By Tom Walker

A number of playground projects across the UK face cancellation following government spending cuts.

The Department for Education (DfE) is currently in talks to review the spending levels on play at 132 local authorities.

All projects, however, that are currently under construction will be allowed to go ahead and be completed.

DfE has asked local authorities to put on hold only projects where contracts have been entered into but where works have not yet begun.

A DfE spokesman said: “The coalition inherited unrealistic spending commitments for 2010-11, where funding was reliant on underspend or additional funding being taken from reserves.

“Play is important for children and families – but investment has got to be realistic and affordable.”

DfE announced on 5 July that it would reduce its reliance on End Year Flexibility by £1bn in 2010-11.

It followed the announcement on 14 July by sending out letters to local authorities and councils setting out how the cuts would impact on playground building.

In the letter, secretary of state for education Michael Gove said: “Play has to make its contribution to tackling the deficit along with other important programmes.

“The department will be asking every local authority for information on the status of their projects.

“The cost of expenditure already incurred for completed sites will be covered, and local authorities will also be able to continue with sites where groundworks/construction has already commenced.”
Industry welcomes PM's tourism speech

David Cameron highlights tourism as ‘fundamental’ to the country's economic recovery

By Tom Walker

The leisure industry has embraced David Cameron's pledge to place tourism "at the heart of plans to ensure the UK's economic recovery".

In a key speech on tourism, given by the PM at the Serpentine Gallery on 12 August, Cameron called for tourism to be recognised as one of the cornerstones of the economy.

He said: "Quite frankly, right now, we're just not doing enough to make the most of our tourism. The last government underplayed our tourist industry. It's fundamental to the rebuilding and rebalancing of our economy.

"Tourism presents a huge economic opportunity. Not just bringing business to Britain but right across Britain, driving new growth in the regions and helping to deliver the rebalancing of our national economy that is so desperately needed."

The response to the PM's speech was almost universally positive, with the British Hospitality Association and the Tourism Alliance among the associations to respond to Cameron's call.

There was one dissenting voice, however, in the form of Nick Varney, CEO of Merlin Entertainments. While "broadly welcoming" the speech, Varney pointed out that Cameron had offered little substance.

Culture Grid opens the UK's online collections

By Tom Walker

More than one million objects from collections at museums, galleries, libraries and archives across the UK are now viewable online for the first time.

Culture Grid, a new initiative from the Collections Trust, is being funded by the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council (MLA) and the European Commission, and supported by the Museums Galleries Scotland.

The scheme aims to draw together information from thousands of museum, archive and library websites and databases and feed it to mainstream media partners such as Google, Flickr, the BBC, and Wikipedia. This increases the information’s profile and enables more people to access it. It is part of Collections Trust’s efforts to reach new audiences and generate potential financial gain through image buying services.

Phill Purdy, grid manager at the Collections Trust, said: "UK collections are a rich, often untapped resource.

"The Culture Grid provides a fast, simple and sustainable way of connecting people to these unparalleled resources, allowing more people to share, enjoy and learn from collections in new ways."

The website will display more than 1 million objects
Premier League to introduce new rules

Premier League clubs could have to prove they are up to date with payments to HM Revenue and Customs (HMRC) under new rules to be introduced in the 2010-11 season.

The competition’s board will be given the power to request quarterly details showing that each member club hasn’t fallen behind with payment of PAYE and National Insurance liabilities.

A prospective new club owner will be required to provide future information outlining projected finances and proving the club is sustainable for at least a year after the deal as part of the new HMRC regulations.

Football League clubs secure £372m funding boost

By Pete Hayman

The Premier League has announced a £372m package to be shared by Football League (FL) clubs over the next three years, after a number of rule changes were agreed.

At an extraordinary general meeting, Football League members approved changes to regulations governing club finances, ownership and the criteria for grounds, as well as third party interests in players.

As a result, clubs in the npower Championship are set to secure an additional £2.2m per season in extra revenue, with League One and League Two clubs also securing £335,000 and £225,000 per year respectively.

Premier League chief executive Richard Scudamore said: “The extra revenue coming in every season for the next three years will make an enormous difference to the individual incomes of those clubs, but more importantly will make planning for the future that much easier.”

Spectator sports to continue at Bromsgrove

Bromsgrove’s Victoria Ground has been allowed to continue hosting spectator sporting events by Worcestershire County Council (WCC), subject to conditions. The venue is used by Bromsgrove Rovers Football Club for its home games but does not have a current safety certificate. However, it will continue to host events while the club restricts access to two stands. WCC emergency planning manager Nick Riding said: "Since the Victoria Ground is not a designated stadium, a safety certificate is not required as long as those stands are not provided to spectators."

Bath Rugby secures Farleigh approval

Bath Rugby has been awarded planning permission for the first phase of a scheme to transform Farleigh House, near Farleigh Hungerford, into a new headquarters for the club. The property will undergo an extensive refurbishment to accommodate all of the club’s staff, with the chapel to be converted into a gym and work set to start on the construction of a training pitch.

The deal led to a further £6.5m being made available for investment in the World Class Performance Programme in the period from 2009 to 2013.

Aberdeen stadium plans submitted

The plans for the new £40m, 21,000-seat stadium will boast a housing element

By Martin Nash

Aberdeen Football Club (AFC) has lodged a planning application with Aberdeen City Council to build a new £40m stadium at Loirston.

The site at Loirston Loch near Nigg was named as the preferred site for the Dons’ new 21,000-seat stadium after AFC decided its current base at Pittodrie was ‘outdated’.

The new development – designed by the Miller Partnership – will feature hospitality suites; facilities for the players, supporters and the wider community; club offices; car and coach parking and a club museum. The all-seater arena will have three public stands and a main stand.

A further proposal will see the whole stadium lit by a red glow at night. The application would also see the club’s existing stadium and ancillary buildings demolished to make way for a proposed residential development comprising around 350 town houses and apartments.

Duncan Fraser, the club’s new chief executive, said: “The exciting design will create a modern, atmospheric stadium that offers the ultimate match-day experience.”

£15m Fife leisure complex approved

Kirkcaldy leisure centre has been approved despite public concerns over location

By Luke Tuchscherer

A £15m leisure and swimming complex has been given the green light in Kirkcaldy, Fife.

Fife Council and Fife Sport & Leisure Trust are behind the scheme and the former approved the plans for the centre, to be built on the site of the Tolbooth Street Car Park.

The new leisure centre will include a 25m main swimming pool, a smaller teaching pool with moveable floor, a health suite, a full-size sports hall, a play centre, a 60-station fitness suite, a large aerobics studio, a meeting room and a café.

However, a row has erupted due to the location of the scheme, with locals fearing that a lack of parking will adversely affect the high street shops.

The council has defended the plans though, saying that the town has adequate parking.

Local authority leader Peter Grant was quoted on STV as saying: "I am absolutely confident that when the people of Kirkcaldy really understand what it is that’s being offered to them, they’ll see that it’s a massive improvement on the facilities they have just now. "Kirkcaldy’s been denied an adequate swimming pool for 20 or 30 years, and I don’t want to see that continuing for another 20 years. I want to see this pool built soon."

There are six sites in the pipeline, with Aberdeen, Belfast and Derby among prospective locations.
Southampton museum gets go ahead

£15m Sea City Museum project wins the approval of Southampton City Council

By Luke Tuchscherer

The £15m Sea City Museum project in Southampton has been given the go ahead by the city council, though the council will need to borrow millions of funds to make up a funding shortfall.

The Sea City Museum, which will feature two permanent exhibitions focusing on Southampton’s Titanic story and the city’s role as a gateway to the world, was given £4.6m grant by Heritage Lottery Fund in March, but still needs to find an extra £10m.

Controversially, it had planned to sell £5m of prized artwork, but this idea was scrapped and the council is now going to look towards individual donors and Hampshire County Council to make up the deficit. Councillor John Hannides, Southampton’s cabinet member for leisure, culture and heritage, told the BBC: “The city council will have a look right across its portfolio of assets to see what can be used to support the project. There are no plans to raise council tax or anything of that nature, this is about raising the funds from capital receipts.”

Forming part of Southampton’s wider Cultural Quarter development, Sea City Museum will be housed within a converted Grade II-listed Magistrates’ Court adjoining the city’s Civic Centre.

As recently reported by Leisure Opportunities, the council appointed the Kier Group as the contractor.

Sea City Museum is to open in 2012, the 100th anniversary of the Titanic’s sinking.

L’pool museums closure warning

By Pete Hayman

Liverpool’s National Conservation Centre and Piermaster’s House could shut at the end of October due to public sector cuts, said the sites’ operator.

National Museums Liverpool (NML), which receives 95 per cent of its funding from the government, has been told to prepare for cuts of up to 40 per cent and has launched a petition calling for the plans to be reconsidered.

Ministers are due to reveal the findings of a spending review later this year, which will determine how much NML will have to cut.

NML director Dr David Fleming said: “Because of unfair government cuts, we are being forced to consider the unthinkable - the closure of some of Merseyside’s best loved venues.

“We have launched a petition at each of our eight museums and galleries and urge people to pledge their support. These are unprecedented times and we are not prepared to lie down and accept it.”

Grand Pier opening put on hold

The 106-year-old pier, which was damaged by fire in 2008, should have reopened this summer after a multi-million pound overhaul, but Michael revealed that it is unlikely to open until September.

Michael said: “Practical completion should have taken place on 25 June, when we expected to be handed they keys. However, this date has been put back repeatedly and it is now clear that the contractors are still some way from completion.

Does government support tourism?

After many years of doubt with previous administrations, David Cameron’s recent speech on tourism surely gives the answer. Not even when the last government launched its various strategies has there been such an enthusiastic endorsement of tourism by a Prime Minister.

For many years, the industry has been emphasizing its job-creating potential, its importance to regional economies and its £25bn investment in new facilities. So it’s refreshing to see the Prime Minister recognise this contribution and speak so enthusiastically of the value of the industry to the UK economy, and its potential future contribution.

Some of Mr Cameron’s promises were particularly welcome – for example, the pledge to take a ‘good look across government’ at all policies that don’t fit neatly into the tourism or DCMS departmental box but nonetheless impact on the sector. The industry was pleading for joined-up government long before it became a fashionable phrase.

The emphasis that the Prime Minister placed on the importance of tourism to local economies was also welcome. How well this translates into practice will greatly influence the future success of UK tourism. Certainly, some local authorities will be unfamiliar with the needs of the industry and all of them will need positive advice and guidance, with input from the private sector if the new policy is to be successful.

And challenges remain. If 36 per cent of what Britons spend on holiday is spent at home, how easy will it be to raise this to 50 per cent, as the Prime Minister asked? The answer is: not at all easy. Outbound tourism is well established. Britons spend more on holiday abroad because they stay longer and they are encouraged overseas by air travel which is still relatively cheap (though becoming more expensive with Air Passenger Duty). Changing this pattern will take time and a real effort on the part of the industry, local authorities, and government; it should not deflect us from strenuous measures to boost inbound tourism, which yields valuable foreign currency.

However, the Prime Minister’s speech presents us with an opportunity to move UK tourism forward, placing it securely as one of the country’s principal economic drivers. That’s the opportunity we must grasp, for the benefit of the industry and for the UK economy as a whole.
Holistic charity forced to shut down

FIH forced to cut operations earlier than planned due to arrest of former official

By Tom Walker

The Prince’s Foundation for Integrated Health (FIH), a charity founded by the Prince of Wales, has been shut down.

The closure of FIH, which promoted a holistic approach to medicine and lobbied for a greater use of homeopathic treatments, comes after one of its former senior officials was arrested on a fraud charge.

In a statement, FIH claimed that the closure of the organisation had been in planning for months but had been “brought forward as a result of a fraud investigation at the charity”.

The FIH statement added that: “The Trustees feel that the foundation has achieved its key objective of promoting the use of integrated health. Since the foundation was set up in 1993, integrated health has become part of the mainstream healthcare agenda, with more than half a million patients using complementary therapies each year, alongside conventional medicine.”

In February 2010, MPs on the Commons Science and Technology Committee called for an end to homeopathy treatment on the NHS.

The city of Derry/Londonderry in Northern Ireland has been named the UK’s first City of Culture after holding off competition from three other finalists – Birmingham, Norwich and Sheffield.

According to the judging panel, the city was chosen due to its "strong cultural programme" and the way it draws on the city's past.

In a statement, the panel added that the decision was also made in recognition of "the passion and commitment of the city and its supporters and the strong evidence of engagement across all parties and communities in the city – and the potential step changes they envisage".

The announcement was made at an event in Liverpool on 15 July by culture minister Ed Vaizey and Phil Redmond.

Mayor of Londonderry, Colum Eastwood, said the success will have a massive impact on the people and economy of the city.

"I am privileged to be in a position where I have had an insight into the massive amount of work that has gone into this successful bid. I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the agencies, organisations and individual citizens who have helped with the bid."

Capita Symonds, which has been the club’s official partner since 2004, employs around 150 people in two Bristol offices.

Bristol Rugby currently plays in the English Championship, the second tier of the English Rugby Union structure.
Greenfield Dock regeneration completed

Flintshire County Council has completed work on a three-year scheme to modernise Greenfield Dock in North Wales. The two-phase programme started as the result of the Welsh Assembly Government’s Wales Coastal Path project – set up in 2007 – and the Flintshire coastal cycle path initiative. Phase one included the installation of a tarmac walkway, interpretation panels and a sculpture, while phase two has involved work to improve the cycle park and improve the dock's commercial element.

Staffordshire’s Caldon Canal reopens

Staffordshire’s Caldon Canal has been reopened by British Waterways after £500,000 of repairs, following a breach last November. The breach caused the collapse of a 15m (49ft) length of canal embankment and damage to the canal bed and its clay lining. Around 21 million gallons (95.5m litres) of water leaked across agricultural land and into the River Churnet. Temporary dams were put in place at Leek Tunnel, closing access to the length of canal between the tunnel and the canal terminus. Fencing was also put in place to prevent towpath users accessing the breach site.

Castle Semple project gets green light

The Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) has awarded initial support for a heritage and access project at Castle Semple Country Park, Scotland. HLF has given a first-round pass worth £394,800, along with Development Funding of £34,800. The funding will be used to create the Semple Trail, a project that will tell the story of the estate and make access to its cultural and natural heritage easier and more fun.

£5.8m boost for urban green spaces

Natural England to fund nearly 30 projects across the country’s towns and cities

By Martin Nash

Natural England’s Access to Nature programme is set to fund 29 new projects in England’s towns and cities. The £5.8m grant will enable communities to improve the green spaces in their area, providing a range of volunteering opportunities, conservation training, events and group activities, as well as the regeneration of often under-used and derelict land.

Funded through the Big Lottery Fund’s (BIG) Changing Spaces programme, Access to Nature is coordinated by Natural England, leading a consortium comprising British Waterways, the Environment Agency, the Forestry Commission, Greenspace, the National Trust and the Woodland Trust.

BIG chief executive Peter Wanless said: “These projects will help thousands of people across the country, particularly those in our towns and cities, to get outside and enjoy nature. "They are great examples of what the Big Lottery Fund’s Changing Spaces funding programme is all about.”

HNF funding support for Morden Hall Park revamp

By Martin Nash

Morden Hall Park in south London, home to a rare surviving example of a 19th century agricultural estate, has received £900,000 from the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF). The park, which was formerly owned by the Hatfield family and is now run by the National Trust, forms part of the Wandle Valley Conservation Area.

The HLF grant will go towards the £2.5m Heart of the Park project, which will see important buildings such as the 19th century stable yard and the remaining waterwheel renovated and conserved.

The two-year project will allow access to the 19th-century stable yard for the first time in 130 years, as well as creating a centre for sustainable renovation. The conservation of a waterwheel will help explain the River Wandle’s heritage.

A further element of the project is the work to install a hydroelectric turbine in the Wandle, which will flow through the park. The turbine, an Archimedes screw, could be the first hydroelectric turbine of its type in London.

Sue Bowers, head of the HLF for London, said: “This innovative and exemplary approach to restoration, conservation and interpretation will make this a genuinely sustainable ‘deep green’ heritage project that will simultaneously bring alive the industry of the past while embracing that of the future.”

Plymouth property firm scrapped

SWRDA says the decision was due to the government’s budget cuts

By Tom Walker

Plymouth City Development Company (PCDC) will be scrapped due to there being “no realistic prospect of further public sector funding” for the business.

The announcement of the closure was made by the South West Regional Development Agency (SWRDA), which funds the PCDC in partnership with Plymouth City Council and the Homes and Communities Agency (HCA). A spokesperson for the council confirmed that the decision to close PCDC would have no effect on the ongoing £45m Plymouth Life Centre project.

In a statement, SWRDA said: “Given the difficult spending decisions which will need to be taken across the public sector nationally the board was informed that there was no realistic prospect of sufficient funding being generated to meet this gap.”

Further funding for Ashford arts project

By Pete Hayman

A new flexible arts space is set to be created in the heart of Ashford, Kent, after the local authority was awarded £4.2m of Growth Area Funding for 2010-11 from the central government.

Ashford Borough Council (ABC) is planning to transform St Mary’s Church into the new arts venue, while also using the funding to develop a new-look station forecourt in a bid to help grow the local economy and to attract more visitors.

As I write this month’s column millions of school and college leavers across the country will be tentatively waiting to receive their GCSE and A-level results. And yet despite the number of A*-C grades that I’m sure will be achieved, industry employers will still not receive the work ready young people they so desperately need.

The difficulties lie in the fact that most school and college leavers lack the vital vocational skills and experience that employer’s want. Experience of the workplace is vital when looking to start a career in the sector. That said, it is vital, now more than ever, that all young people are gaining the skills that they need to impress in the marketplace. The economic climate and the shaky recovery from the recession mean that employers are looking for skills above and beyond academia. The challenge is for young people to gain some work experience to ensure employability and widen their choices. The coalition government has publicly re-enforced its commitment to apprenticeships, and pledged funding to support this commitment. As an industry, this is what we should be utilising.

Yes we need those managers and leaders of the future, but more often than not, the industry needs those young people who want to start on the leisure centre floor, get trained and qualified as they go, and move up the ladder in a structured way while working and earning money. Since the recession began, employment in key occupations within sport and fitness has grown; however, our industry is not immune to the economic instability. The public do have a greater acceptance of the importance of health and well-being; however, we do need to ensure that consumer spending in physical activity and health continues to hold firm. I would argue therefore, that investment in the right skills and training is central to economic recovery.

We need to ensure we continue to deliver on key agendas such as obesity, social inclusion, cultural diversification, disengaged communities and physical inactivity. For us to do that we simply need to have the right workforce in place, with the right skills and qualifications to support and encourage people to take part in sport and physical activity time and again.

So I say to all those holding their results in their hands, we need you. And through a structured learning pathway in the form of a programme such as an apprenticeship, you can grow, develop and get qualified in one of the most vibrant and exciting industries there is. Flying start for Alliance academy

Training academy reaches 3,000 delegate landmark

By Tom Walker

Alliance Leisure’s Training Academy has seen more than 3,000 delegates pass through its courses since the Academy’s launch just over six months ago.

More than 200 staff from Cardiff City Council alone have completed the Foundation Sales course and a recent partnership with Coventry Sports Trust has resulted in all their staff attending various Academy modules. The training has also helped staff from Blackpool Council attract more than 2,000 members across its leisure centres.

The launch of the Training Academy followed on from the launch of Alliance Leisure’s accredited training modules and was introduced to give employers flexibility regarding the variety of courses staff can attend in order to receive additional skills.

A cross section of workshops and courses are offered, spanning many areas including sales, customer service, communication and marketing and planning.

New modules have recently been added, including a Team Building workshop and Making Technology Work for You.

NVQ training for Fitness First staff

Fitness First is to roll out NVQ training throughout its UK clubs after a successful pilot scheme. The initiative is part of the group’s strategy to train up all club-based staff to level 2 or 3 by 2012.

The first 50 employees have now been presented with their NVQ qualifications and more than 150 additional club based staff have begun their NVQ training in customer service.

Fitness First managing director John Gamble said the initiative is part of the group’s “commitment to delivering quality training and development” for staff and providing the “highest levels” of customer service to its members.

The training will be delivered in partnership with training provider Lifetime.

The Public arts centre in West Brom 'under threat'

By Pete Hayman

The future of The Public arts venue in West Bromwich remains uncertain after the local council suggested it would be unable to fund when grant funding ends.

Last year, Arts Council England (ACE) agreed to provide a one-off grant worth £3m after originally revealing it would withdraw support as a result of delays in opening the venue's interactive art gallery.

The ACE funding is due to come to an end in March 2011, and the BBC has reported that Sandwell Metropolitan Borough Council (SMBC) does not expect to be able to meet the shortfall.

SMBC deputy leader Steve Eling told the broadcaster that the council is to seek further ACE support but will have to review the current business plan as a result of budget cuts.

Eling said: "Everyone knows what is happening with public sector budgets, so I have made clear that there cannot be any expectation that the council would make up the gap."

Arts & Business launches Big Arts Give initiative

By Tom Walker

A total of 125 arts charities have successfully applied to take part in Arts & Business’ The Big Arts Give – an initiative aiming to rejuvenate individual cultural philanthropy.

Charitable arts and cultural organisations from across the UK aim to raise at least £1m in private sector pledges, which could subsequently result in £3m being donated to these charities by Christmas. Arts & Business is spearheading the scheme as part of its strategy to develop relationships with new givers. As part of the scheme, it launched a £500,000 fund in partnership with Alec Reed in April.

The fund is designed to leverage the maximum potential from arts contributions. £1 from an online donor matched pound for pound, while Arts & Business claims that every £1 invested by it is leveraged the maximum potential from arts contributions.

The aim is to raise £3m for arts charities by Christmas
