Prince Harry backs ‘Made by Sport’

A major new Sport England campaign, aiming to use sport as a force for good, has received the royal approval from Prince Harry, Duke of Sussex.

The four-year Made By Sport campaign will champion the role sport can play in changing lives and looks to raise £40m worth of funding to create sporting opportunities in disadvantaged communities.

Prince Harry attended the launch of the campaign and said investment in grassroots sports would save “hundreds of millions of pounds” in treating the problems of a “lost generation” of young people.

“You can always separate the people who have had sport in their lives from a very young age, compared to the people that haven’t,” he said.

“It helps with setting core values and I believe that if you don’t have sport in your life then it will be a very isolated journey.

“We have a responsibility – through this campaign – to ensure places that are being shut down are not being shut down and that people from all walks of society and every corner of this country are actually given the opportunity to shine, to flourish.”

Made By Sport intends to reach its target through a combination of corporate partnerships and public fundraising initiatives.

Prince Harry was joined at the launch by former world champion boxer Anthony Joshua

Robert Gofton named chief executive of Royal Life Saving Society

The Royal Life Saving Society UK (RLSS UK) has appointed Robert Gofton as its new chief executive.

He will take over from Rick Tazzini, the charity's interim CEO, who has held the role since December 2018, following the exit of Di Steer.

Formerly the CEO for children's charity CHICKS, Gofton is a former professional cricketer whose sporting career was cut short by a shoulder injury.

Since his retirement from professional sport, he has gained extensive experience working within both the charity and private sectors. His previous roles in the leisure sector include a stint as director of operations at One World Events in Bristol.

"RLSS UK is a fantastic organisation with a wonderful heritage," Gofton said. "I can't wait to get started and help the society become even more successful."

Ian Hutchings, president of RLSS UK added: “Our recruitment process has borne fruit and in Robert we’ve appointed the best person to the role of CEO.”

Earlier this year, the water-safety charity appointed Mike Owen as chair, replacing the outgoing Dawn Whittaker.

Owen’s appointment was accompanied by the announcement that Jo Talbot had been named director of IQL UK – RLSS’ awarding arm.

The charity’s board has also received two new members – Maggie Bradley and Richard Rickwood – who have been appointed as trustees.

New museum celebrating Formula One legend Jim Clark to open in July

The life and career of two-time Formula One world champion Jim Clark is to be celebrated with a new £1.6m museum – partly funded by the UK’s National Lottery Heritage Fund (NLHF) – in Duns, in the Scottish Borders.

Since opening in 1969, the existing museum has welcomed more than 300,000 visitors, including the legendary Brazilian driver Ayrton Senna, who made an entry in the museum’s visitor book.

Expanding on a previous Jim Clark display, the new museum is due to open on 11 July and will include trophies, pictures, film footage, interactive displays and even two of the cars that Clark raced during a glittering career which saw him win the drivers’ title in 1963 and 1965. He took 25 Grand Prix victories in total and won the iconic Indianapolis 500 in 1965. Clark died in a crash at Hockenheim, Germany, in 1968, aged just 32.

First announced in August 2016, the Jim Clark Trust has worked with the Scottish Borders Council and charity Live Borders on creating the new museum, which it hopes will draw visitors to the region, helping to support local shops, hotels and restaurants.

Huw Edwards, acting CEO of ukactive, has called for a “cultural shift” across government in order for it to recognise the crucial role that the physical activity sector can play in improving the nation’s health.

Edwards, giving the opening speech at the Active Uprising conference in Manchester, said the sector’s partnership with government needs to go “beyond” its current state and for all government departments to acknowledge the sector as an important partner – rather than just an “afterthought”.

“Our sector’s partnership with government and its institutions has to go beyond a signed Memorandum of Understanding, investment and a set of agreed objectives. “This requires a cultural shift across government and its agencies to show how it values our sector and wants to work with us. “It has the opportunity to draw much better on our expertise and experience to address some of the major challenges we face, and see us as an instinctive solution, rather than an afterthought. “Although progress has been made, regrettably in Whitehall there are still too many of the same people discussing the same issues, leading to the same outcomes and sadly the same lack of change.

Fitness group Les Mills has joined forces with Sport England’s This Girl Can campaign to help break down women’s barriers to fitness.

The partnership will result in Les Mills offering a free 21-day trial to its Les Mills On Demand platform – as well as a bespoke programme designed specifically for women who are new, or returning, to exercise.

The tailored programme includes shorter-form videos and beginner tutorials designed to reduce common barriers to exercise that women face, including feeling intimidated, lack of time and low confidence in their fitness abilities.

The videos – which are supported with personalised familiarisation of the content – can be used at home and include motivational emails from Les Mills to encourage women to get started and inspire them to keep going.

“We know our programming has been a successful first step in helping thousands of women fall in love with fitness so were delighted to be asked by Sport England to support This Girl Can,” said Wendy Coulson, CEO at Les Mills UK. “Our programming will support the This Girl Can audience at every step, helping them form a great new exercise habit.”

Sir Michael Dixon, director of the Natural History Museum in London, is bringing his 15-year tenure to an end, after announcing that he will retire from the role on 31 March 2021, having overseen the first year of the museum’s new Strategy to 2031.

A committee of trustees has been appointed to identify Sir Michael’s successor, with the intention of the candidate joining the museum as director designate in late 2020. Chair of the Board Lord Green of Hurstpierpoint will lead the search committee. Lord Green paid tribute to Sir Michael’s achievements, pointing out that under his leadership the museum had doubled its visitor numbers to 5.5 million per year, as well as developing its global relationships and scientific expertise to tackle major scientific challenges such as biodiversity loss, the spread of diseases and the supply of scarce minerals.

“As guardian for our globally-important collection of more than 80 million specimens, Sir Michael has made mass digitisation and open access images and data a priority, enabling everyone to draw on this great global resource. The board is grateful to him for these and his many other significant achievements as director of the museum.”

During his tenure, Sir Michael has overseen the museum’s biggest capital development in decades, with the opening of the Darwin Centre in 2010. In 2017, the newly reimagined Hintze Hall was reopened, complete with Hope, the blue whale skeleton suspended from the ceiling.

David Gill, former Manchester United chief executive and vice chair of the Football Association (FA), has been given a CBE. In 2015, Gill was elected as a FIFA vice-president, but he rejected the position in protest at disgraced FIFA president Sepp Blatter, until Blatter announced his resignation.

A number of sports administrators have been handed OBEs. One of these is Sally Munday, the chief executive of England and GB Hockey – who last month was appointed CEO of UK Sport. During her tenure at GB Hockey, Team GB women secured their first ever Olympic title at the Rio 2016 Games, while the men’s team finished fourth at London 2012, their best Olympic Games finish in a quarter of a century.

Another to have received an OBE was Cherry Alexander, major events director at British Athletics, who was managing director of London 2017 – the organisations responsible for staging the successful IAAF World Championships.

Could an incentive of £1.60 get people active?

More than two thirds (68 per cent) of Americans would devote at least an hour each day on fitness activities, if they’d receive a financial incentive of as little as US$2 (£1.60) per day.

The 2019 UnitedHealthcare Wellness Checkup Survey also reveals that nearly 80 per cent of people would be more likely to participate in fitness sessions which offered an opportunity to socialise or make friends.

The nationwide study examined people’s opinions about health topics and preferences.

Compiled by health care specialist UnitedHealthcare, the report was based on a sample of 1,000 US adults aged 18 and older.

The study is the latest to suggest that financial incentives could be the key to getting people more physically active.

Last year, a major report by research institute RAND Europe also stated that offering tangible benefits dramatically increased people’s physical activity levels.

While conducted on the US market, the study could provide useful insight into creating incentive-led fitness and wellbeing programmes in other markets too – including in the UK.

Hannah Lanel launches new boutique concept in London

Hannah Lanel has opened The Fore – a new model of boutique gym offering two instructors per class – in London’s King’s Cross, an increasingly residential area of the city.

The Fore is part of a growing trend towards combining upscale interiors with fitness to create a new business model for customers who are willing to pay more to work out in a designer environment.

The business model at The Fore is groundbreaking in that each class has two instructors – one to lead the class, and the other to adjust form, to ensure exercises are done with anatomical and functional accuracy.

Offering a number of personal and group training programmes, the boutique occupies a total area of 5,500 sq ft (511 sq m).

Up and Active project returning ‘£28 for every £1’

A project aiming to get people across East Lancashire more physically active is achieving a social return on investment of £28 for every £1 spent.

The Up and Active programme offers activity sessions based around exercise – including targeted weight management activities, a programme of exercise for children and young people and a dedicated cardiac rehabilitation programme.

The scheme is delivered by a consortium of five East Lancashire leisure trusts – Pendle Leisure Trust, Burnley Leisure Trust, Hyndburn Leisure Trust, Rossendale Leisure Trust and Ribble Valley Borough Council – and was assessed by an external evaluator between March and May 2019.

“The results of the report show that many people are benefiting from the services and activities we collectively provide and are feeling happier, more confident and enjoying life more by using our facilities and services on a regular basis,” said a spokesperson for the Up and Active consortium.

IHRSA report: global market worth £74bn

There are now more than 210,000 health clubs in the world, serving a total of 183 million members during 2018.

The figure comes from the 2019 IHRSA Global Report, published by The International Health, Racquet & Sportsclub Association (IHRSA).

The annual report also shows that the revenues achieved by health clubs globally totalled US$94bn (£84bn, £74bn), with the top 10 markets accounting for more than two out of three health club members and 71 per cent of total industry revenue.

New platform to ‘share what works’

A new leadership learning initiative aims to transform knowledge sharing in the physical activity sector.

Launched in partnership by ukactive and Sport England, Communities of Learning will operate through an online platform that allows leaders in the physical activity sector to discuss burning issues and areas of interest – from emerging risks and getting young people more active to women’s leadership.

The focus of the discussions will be on “sharing what works”, in order for organisations within sports, fitness and leisure to be able to improve their operations to help more people get active.

The announcement was made at the recent Active Uprising conference, which took place in Manchester.

“As every day organisations across sector are creating innovative new solutions to get more people active,” said ukactive acting CEO Huw Edwards.

“Sharing these experiences, however, has been limited.”

Sport England CEO Tim Hollingsworth added: “The learning and development platform has been designed to benefit all organisations working to help people get active by sharing good practice and evidence-based learnings on what works and what doesn’t.”

Premier League a ‘significant generator’ of inbound tourism

The English Premier League (EPL) is a major driver of inbound tourism into Britain – especially when it comes to sports fans from long-haul destinations.

Research by tourism agency VisitBritain shows that the EPL is a leading generator of inbound tourism among overseas football fans, with more than three-quarters of those surveyed intending to visit the UK during the next two years.

Chinese football fans surveyed showed the greatest intention with 92 per cent planning to visit the UK within the next two years, followed by India (85 per cent) and the US (80 per cent).

VisitBritain’s International Football Research report also found that the EPL had a greater pull for tourists than the top leagues in other countries.

“This research cements the huge pull that Premier League football has in attracting international tourists to Britain,” said VisitBritain director Patricia Yates.

New fund to diversify coach and volunteer workforce

Sport England has launched a new fund aimed at diversifying the country’s coach and volunteer workforce.

The £1m Workforce Diversity Great Ideas Fund will be open for a month and will offer grants to organisations wanting to engage women and/or BAME communities in volunteering or coaching opportunities.

According to Sport England’s head of coaching Stuart Armstrong, the grant will look to address the currently fragmented workforce – partly comprised of coaches and volunteers – that is currently “lacking diversity”.

“Learning what works to engage and support these audiences into volunteering and coaching is key and we want to work with organisations to learn what approaches work and why,” Armstrong said.

“There are any number of potential learning opportunities – from unusual partnerships and testing ways of using new technology to getting women engaged in volunteering.”

I’m delighted to announce that CIMSPA has established an exciting new partnership with sportscotland. We have entered into a Memorandum of Understanding and Trust (MoUT) with the national agency for sport to support and strengthen the sporting workforce in Scotland.

Developed over nine months, the MoUT will see us work alongside sportscotland to support the delivery of its new strategy to create an active Scotland where everyone benefits from sport and physical activity.

Workforce development
The devolved nature of sport and education means that we can no longer take a blanket approach to workforce development. This MoUT with sportscotland gives us a presence in Scotland and allows us to pool our expertise so that we can provide a bespoke solution for Scotland.

There are great sport and physical activity professionals delivering and developing sport in Scotland. The MoUT allows us to further develop these professionals to make an even bigger impact on the sporting system.

Working together, we will develop the Scottish workforce system through a number of initiatives. These include the creation of a suite of professional standards that are fit for purpose for Scotland – to be approved by a Scottish Professional Development Board (SPBD) – and validating, endorsing and quality assuring coaching qualifications in Scotland.

Flexible learning
The relationship will also ensure the portability of Scottish qualification throughout the UK via the CIMSPA kitemark. Sport & education policy and guidance may be devolved, but CIMSPA’s kitemark remains constant ensuring UK-wide recognition for our Scottish members and any sports and activity professionals who have received CIMSPA-endorsed training in Scotland.

The partnership will also see the creation of the first CIMSPA post in Scotland. Jointly managed by CIMSPA and sportscotland, the new partnership manager will engage with CIMSPA employers, education partners and members in Scotland to ensure the chartered institute’s work aligns with sportscotland’s corporate strategy.

We look forward to working with sportscotland to allow sports and physical activity professionals to realise their potential to help the people of Scotland get the most from the sporting system.

The partnership will allow CIMSPA to help develop the Scottish workforce using bespoke solutions.

Swim England launches baby qualification

A new qualification has been developed to help babies and toddlers discover their love of swimming.

Launched by Swim England, the new Level 2 Teaching Swimming to Babies and Toddlers award will enable swimming teachers to make baby’s first experiences of the water special.

It has been designed to give teachers the knowledge, skills and confidence to plan and teach baby and toddler swimming lessons.

Swim England educator Catherine Butt played a key role in the development of the new qualification, and believes it is unique in today’s market.

“The key to the new qualification is that it gives learners a great understanding of children of this age – how the children develop, how they learn and how that is fundamentally different to the five-year-old swimmers they will work with through the Learn to Swim programme,” she said.

“Among the unique features is that learners on these courses will be assessed working with adults and children – not with dolls or using simulated practice.

“All assessments will be on real adults with real babies and toddlers, which should prove extremely popular and beneficial.”

Receiving the award, Dave Candler, STA’s CEO, said he was “honoured and proud”.

“At STA, we pride ourselves on having a friendly, flexible and proactive approach to supporting all of our customers, large and small – it is a very important component of our service.”

Serpentine Pavilion opens to the public

Japanese architect Junya Ishigami has created a shingle-covered Serpentine Pavilion that draws on the ancient building cultures of Cumbria, UK. Situated on the grounds of The Serpentine Gallery in London's Kensington Gardens, the artwork features a 61-tonne slate canopy and is supported by a series of white poles.

“This is an attempt to supplement traditional architecture with modern methodologies and concepts, to create in this place an expanse of scenery like never seen before,” explained Ishigami, who is the 19th architect to devise a temporary pavilion for the gallery.

Slate for the roof, which was added to give the structure an ‘organic’ and primeval look, was sourced from Cumbria’s Honister Mine, which has been in operation since 1728.

“It’s a beautiful thing, the way Junya Ishigami is showcasing the natural qualities of the slate,” said Joe Weir, co-owner of Honister.

“His design reflects the rugged nature of the landscape we live and work in.”

The exhibit opened to the public on 21 June.

Update: boy who fell from Twister leaves hospital

The seven-year-old boy who fell from a rollercoaster at Lightwater Valley theme park in Yorkshire, UK, on 30 May has returned home from hospital.

The Health and Safety Executive, which is investigating the incident, said the boy is “out of hospital and recovering at home”. The child fell from the Twister coaster, a spinning steel ride capable of reaching a speed of 29 mph (47 km/h) with a top height of 43 ft (13m).

Following the incident, the boy was declared to be in a critical condition. He has now, however, recovered sufficiently to have been released from hospital.

In a short statement, Ian Cunningham, CEO of Lightwater Valley Theme Park, said: “We heard great news — that the child who fell from our Twister ride is now recovering at home.

“All of us at Lightwater Valley wish him well in his ongoing recovery. This has been extremely distressing for the family and for all those involved.”

NEW OPENING

Science Museum to open gallery on London’s history

The 650sq m free gallery has been designed by Gitta Gschwendtner and takes visitors on an immersive journey through historic London.

A telescope that once belonged to Sir Isaac Newton, the microscope used by Robert Hooke to create the captivating drawings of insects and plants in his book Micrographia, and a range of objects commissioned by England’s King George III upon his coronation, are among the exhibits at a new permanent gallery in London’s Science Museum.

The Science City 1550–1800: The Linbury Gallery exhibition, which is due to open in September, explores how London’s scientists and artisans helped to transform humanity’s understanding of the world over the 250 years from 1550.

Plans for Mullin UK car museum get the go-ahead

Proposals for a world-class automotive museum in the heart of the English countryside have moved a step further to realisation after West Oxfordshire District Council awarded outline planning permission for the plans.

The Mullin Automotive Park will be situated over 63 hectares at a disused airfield – Enstone – near Chipping Norton in Oxfordshire, UK.

It will provide public access to view the classic car collection of US businessman Peter Mullin, founder of M Financial Group, who established the Mullin Automotive Museum in California, US, in 2010.

Since then, new designs for the museum have been drawn up by London architects Foster + Partners.

Peter Mullin said the driving force behind the museum plan was an educational one: “I don’t regard myself as a collector of classic cars, but more as a custodian of a collection which I want to make public.”

It’s all in the genes

A study uncovering genetic insights from 50,000 people will help understand lifestyle diseases – and could have an impact on the physical activity sector

A ground-breaking project is using genomic data from 50,000 people to deepen the understanding of how genetics and lifestyle factors contribute to the development of conditions such as diabetes and arthritis.

The UK government is investing £4.8m in the initiative, which will result in medical experts examining the whole genome sequencing of 50,000 volunteers enlisted from the UK Biobank. It is hoped the project will help uncover the reasons why some people develop diseases and others do not.

GENOMIC MEDICINE

The investment, from UK Research and Innovation (UKRI), is part of the government’s Industrial Strategy Challenge Fund (ISCF) and will pay for the storage and sharing of the huge data depository, which is the equivalent size of 500 billion pages of standard text.

The project dwarfs existing UK Biobank storage and processing facilities and, according to science minister Chris Skidmore, highlights the importance of information technology systems to deliver health research in the future.

“Genomic medicine has the potential to completely change the way medical experts treat every single one of us as

The insights could pave the way for physical activity being recognised as an effective method of preventative healthcare patients in the future, adapting our care to a specific personal health plan based on our genes,” Skidmore said.

The insights could also pave the way for physical activity being recognised as an effective method of preventative healthcare. As healthcare moves into a more personalised approach, it could benefit from patients being provided with bespoke training methods and technologies – backed up by information relating to their genetic makeup.

Professor Fiona Watt, executive chair of the Medical Research Council, a founding funder of UK Biobank, added: “The study of genomic data will be of immense value to researchers, informing future methods of targeting and preventing diseases.

“This investment illustrates how the Industrial Strategy Challenge Fund is driving improvements in our use of data and catalysing improved diagnoses and treatments for patients.”

UK Biobank samples are being sequenced by the Wellcome Sanger Institute, Cambridge. The sequencing began last year with ISCF funding of £30m for the complete genomes of 50,000 UK Biobank volunteers. The data are due to be released in 2020.

LEADING THE WAY
Dr Mark Effingham, UK Biobank chief operating officer, said the resource was increasingly harnessing informatics to make sure it provides the best data it can to researchers around the world.

“Whichever way you look at it, the whole genome sequencing of UK Biobank participants is generating lots and lots of important health data,” he said. “This will provide new leads and insights for research into a very wide range of common and complex diseases. The scale is mind-boggling. The UK is leading health scientists into a new era of research, and these data are lighting our way.”

According to science minister Chris Skidmore, the study highlights the importance of information technology systems to deliver health research in the future.
Winners of the first ever Community Leisure UK Awards have been revealed at a glitzy gala event in Manchester. Previously run under the Sporta Awards banner, the awards were rebranded following the renaming of Sporta – the association of leisure trusts – as Community Leisure UK.

First held in 2016, the awards recognise the achievements of charities and social enterprises in public leisure and culture.

SPOTLIGHT ON EXCELLENCE
Hosted by Sky Sports presenter Hayley McQueen, the event highlighted the distinctive nature of leisure and culture trusts and the broad capabilities of the trust model. While the landscape in which the trusts operate remains challenging – due to the ongoing austerity cuts on funding – the awards night shone a spotlight on the community leisure trust collective right across the UK.

In all, 85 trusts filed entries across the eight award categories. The panel of 11 independent judges, chaired by retired Tees Active MD Steven Chaytor, assessed each application and shortlisted four finalists per category. The panel also featured Tara Dillon, CEO of CIMSPA; Brian Leonard, former CEO of Community Leisure UK; and Jim Moyes, former CEO for Live Active Leisure.

Among the winners was leisure trust GLL, which won the Community Impact through Physical Activity award for its Healthier Together Hackney programme. The project offers weight management and physical activity on referral programmes to support people to achieve their personal goals – whether that be losing weight or becoming more active.

Cate Atwater, CEO, Community Leisure UK

Elsewhere, High Life Highland bagged the Innovation Award for its Leadership Programme aimed at young people aged between 12 and 25.

According to one of the independent judges – Michelle Roberts, physical activity and health programme manager for The Richmond Group – the standard of applications was so high that choosing the finalists and winners was “particularly challenging”.

“It was really interesting and heartening reading the submissions,” Roberts said. “There’s so much great work going on across the sector and the UK”.

INCREDIBLE WORK
For Cate Atwater, Community Leisure UK CEO, the ceremony was an opportunity to highlight the achievements of the leisure and culture trust model – especially as the previous 12 months had been a year of significant change for the association.

“The incredible work delivered by trusts often goes under the radar and, as the association that champions the trust model, we want to bring it to the fore,” Atwater said. “It is a huge honour for us to organise such an evening to ensure that the trusts’ and individuals’ contributions are recognised, thanked, and celebrated as they rightly deserve.

“We congratulate all finalists and winners on their significant achievements. Equally, huge thanks to all members, guests and partners who supported the awards evening to celebrate community trusts.”

Northumbria University (NU) has set out to uncover in detail the important role that structured exercise programmes can play in living with and beyond cancer. Led by professor John Saxton, head of the Department of Sport, Exercise & Rehabilitation at NU, the survey will combine a number of research projects – undertaken in collaboration with NHS Foundation Trusts in the North East, Norwich and Sheffield.

A COLLECTION OF STUDIES

One of the studies will be focused on the role exercise plays in reversing adverse body composition changes – such as increased fat mass and reduced lean body mass – for patients recovering from hormone-receptor positive breast cancer.

Insight

This research is about using physical exercise as part of lifestyle interventions to improve the health of people living with cancer

University study sets out to investigate ‘important role’ exercise can play in cancer care
Another, large-scale multi-centre trial, is investigating how exercise programmes prior to surgery can be used to improve fitness and treatment outcomes in colorectal cancer patients across the UK. Elsewhere, a study will be used to develop effective exercise programmes designed to alleviate the side-effects of prostate cancer and its treatments.

EVIDENCE BASE

“Physical activity and structured exercise have an important role to play in alleviating the physiological and psychological impact of cancer and its treatments,” said Prof. Saxton. “Cancer is now considered a chronic condition because more people are living longer after a cancer diagnosis. This research is about using physical exercise as part of lifestyle interventions to improve the health of people living with and beyond cancer. We know that common cancers, such as cancers of the breast, prostate and colon can be linked to excess body weight and if patients put weight on after treatment, this can be linked to poorer outcomes.

“There is a real need to provide sustainable lifestyle support, including regular exercise, healthy eating and maintenance of a healthy body weight. “This isn’t just about quality of life, as it can also benefit long-term disease outcomes, such as risk of cancer recurrence and the development of cardiometabolic diseases such as type 2 diabetes and cardiovascular conditions.”

The NU research will be closely aligned with NHS treatment plans and has been designed to help build a solid evidence base to support the use of exercise in the holistic management of people living with and beyond cancer.
