Fitness tech firm Motosumo appoints Nick Coutts as chair of the board

Fitness industry veteran Nick Coutts has been appointed chair of Danish fitness tech firm Motosumo.

Coutts took up the role on 1 December, replacing the outgoing chair Nana Bule, who is also CEO of Microsoft Denmark and has been on the board of Motosumo since 2016.

Coutts co-founded Portuguese low-cost chain Fitness Hut in 2011, developing it into the national market leader. The business was acquired by Spain's Viva Gym in 2018, creating the largest low-cost fitness group on the Iberian Peninsula. Prior to that he was the long-time CEO of premium fitness chain Holmes Place.

■ Coutts co-founded Portuguese low-cost chain Fitness Hut

"Fitness is not just about health; it's about communities. And it's amazing to see how Motosumo helps build communities"

"Nick's approach to fitness is aligned with what we do," said Motosumo CEO, Kresten Juel Jensen.

Based in Copenhagen, Motosumo aims to make group fitness "fun and inclusive" with an app and hi-tech.

Commenting on his new role at Motosumo, Coutts said: "It's a remarkable concept that resonates with me on a personal level.

"Fitness is not just about health; it's about communities. And it's amazing to see how Motosumo helps build communities for its instructors and end users.

"Motosumo has the potential to become a leader in the world of group fitness.

"It's a unique platform with an enormous amount of potential. I'm excited to get started with the team! And one of the first things on our agenda is to prepare for an upcoming series A round of investment."

Stem-cell specialist Augustinus Bader collaborates with Victoria Beckham

■ Following her music career, Victoria Beckham has successfully carved out a reputation as a fashion icon

Victoria Beckham Beauty (VBB) has announced a partnership with stem-cell biomedical scientist, Prof Augustinus Bader.

Originally from Germany, Bader is known for his eponymous skin-care range which uses patented stem-cell TFC8 technology, which took 30 years to create.

Bader's products were primarily designed for regenerative-medical use and were applied to skin burns endured by firefighters to promote skin renewal.

"It's been a dream to develop products together with Augustinus"

As a result of the collaboration, VBB has added a Cell Rejuvenating Priming Moisturiser to its range, which launched earlier this year.

"It's been a dream to develop with Augustinus," said Victoria Beckham, a long-term supporter of Bader's skincare brand.

"As someone who only wants the best skincare, I was surprised I didn't have to compromise to have clean ingredients, and now the product works to improve the health of my skin."

Bader added: "It was an honour to collaborate with Victoria for her first skin launch. It's the first priming moisturiser of its kind to care for your skin cells, while also preparing your skin for makeup application".

■ The new Sensory Retreats is a new area of interest for Anderson

"The need to retreat from daily life has become increasingly important and necessary for our emotional self-care"

Lava Shells founder Clare Anderson launches new product house

Clare Anderson, the founder of brands Lava Shells and kokolokahi, has launched a product house and holistic wellbeing brand called Sensory Retreats.

The brand offers three restorative massage treatments, a range of retail products and personal experiences which are designed to elevate wellbeing.

Anderson said: "The need to retreat from daily life has become increasingly important and necessary for our emotional and mental self-care. From my own experience working with spas and developing product lines, I didn't feel that traditional massage treatments and aftercare were fully providing this solution, instead they work on just one or two of the senses. As a result, Sensory Retreats was born."

Each massage in the range has been developed to stimulate the five senses and deliver a specific wellbeing benefit, including spiritual and emotional restoration, mind and body revival, self-empowerment, improvement of circulation and easing of muscle tension.

The three massages offered include Sensory Retreats Lava Shells Massage, Sensory Retreats Mandala Flow and Sensory Retreats Divine Escapes.

Premier League's incoming CEO David Pemsel resigns before taking up role

The English Premier League (EPL) is, again, looking for a new chief executive after the incoming David Pemsel resigned from the role before taking it up.

Pemsel, the CEO of of Guardian Media Group, was named Premier League CEO in October and was supposed to take the helm of the world's most-watched football league in February 2020.

Allegations about his private life, however, led to Pemsel handing in his resignation at both Guardian Media – where he was working his notice – and the EPL.

In a short statement, the EPL said: "Following media disclosures earlier this week and discussions with David Pemsel, the Premier League has today accepted David's resignation and we can confirm that he will no longer be joining as chief executive. Richard Masters will continue as interim chief executive."

Pemsel's resignation means that the 18-month search for a new EPL chief continues. The search was launched in June 2018, when previous CEO Richard Scudamore revealed his plans to stand down in December 2018.

Pemsel is the second person to be given the job – only for them to then pull out before starting.

In November 2018 the EPL announced that it had appointed Susanna Dinnage as its first female CEO. Within weeks, however, Dinnage told the league that she will not be taking up the position.

■ Mayer-Klenk was famous for his inventions for the wellness industry

Bernhard Mayer-Klenk, inventor of experience shower, dies at 78

Bernhard Mayer-Klenk, founder of spa supplier Kemitron GmbH, passed away on 6 November 2019 at age 78.

Kemitron is a German company specialising in the development and manufacture of high-quality products for the sauna, spa and wellness industry.

Mayer-Klenk's curiosity and creativity powered countless innovations in the spa and wellness markets. Perhaps the most well-known of his inventions is the experience shower, but Mayer-Klenk also invented fragrance dosing pumps, automatic sauna infusion systems, salt inhalation systems and much more.

His innovations were fuelled by intimate knowledge of the industry and the close relationships he forged with clients, who would give him direct feedback from guests and visitors. His desire to fulfil guests' every need is credited with giving rise to many of his inventions.

Kemitron was founded in 1977 to provide products for public swimming pools. This quickly evolved as Mayer-Klenk saw the opportunity to expand into spa and wellness sectors.

NEW LAUNCH

Leisure trust launches boutique brand

Life Leisure is expanding its facility portfolio with the launch of an independent boutique fitness brand.

Scheduled to open in early January, H1VE will offer group classes led by fitness coaches and combine cardio, functional, strength and conditioning training.

The first H1VE will launch at the Stockport Sports Village (SSV) in 2020. Life Leisure already operates 12 leisure and fitness facilities in Stockport and H1VE members will be able to attend studio classes, use gyms, and benefit from swimming facilities at any of the venues.

H1VE will be managed and run independently from the leisure trust's other sites, however.

"This will be a different breed of facility for Stockport and for the Life Leisure Group", said Group CEO Malcolm McPhail.

"We have never been a business to stand still and have a history of pioneering new approaches and initiatives, from establishing one of the country's first ever activity self-referral schemes to diversifying into national fitness events."

Ruth Lynch, a group exercise specialist of 25 years is one of the driving forces behind H1VE's launch.

"H1VE will be about working together," she said.

RESEARCH

Being active reduces risk of prostate cancer

There could be a larger effect of exercise on prostate cancer

Sarah Lewis

A large-scale study on genetics has shown that being more physically active reduces the risk of prostate cancer.

A study of 140,000 men found that those with a variation in their DNA sequence that makes them more likely to be active had a 51 per cent reduced risk of prostate cancer, when compared to those who didn't have the variation.

Importantly, the findings related to overall physical activity, not just intense exercise.

Conducted by the University of Bristol, the research is based on the largest ever study to use genetics as a measurement for physical activity and its effect on prostate cancer.

Of the men included in the study, 80,000 had prostate cancer.

We can now go into towns that wouldn't have been on our list

Richard Darwin

The Gym Group has confirmed plans to roll out a new small box format in the UK over the next 12 months.

The format is a scaled-down version of The Gym concept and has been designed to open up opportunities to enter new markets.

The first small box site opened in Newark, Nottinghamshire on 11 November 2019.

The low-cost chain has set itself a target of opening between five and eight small box gyms during 2020.

Describing the new format in August 2019, Richard Darwin, CEO, said: "The

"Our traditional gyms are, on average, around 15,500sq ft in size. The small box sites will be between 5,000sq ft and 9,000sq ft. What it does is offer us the opportunity to go into towns that wouldn't previously have been on our target list."

Frozen 2 sessions to get families in pool

The Institute of Swimming (IOS) is set to continue its Disney-inspired, fun swim sessions as part of a strategy to get more families into the pool.

IOS activators will begin offering "Frozen 2"-themed classes from February 2020, hoping to utilise the huge success of the franchise, which saw the sequel rake in US$350m (£272m) in its opening weekend worldwide – beating the box office debut of the original Frozen film.

The sessions form part of a Swim England and Disney partnership launched in June 2019, which has seen IOS train 560 activators to deliver the sessions across the UK.

To date, more than 42,000 children and parents have taken part in the 45-minute themed sessions which are running for a 12 month period across 50 leisure operators at 223 pools.

Rebecca Cox, IOS managing director, said: "These specialist child and parent sessions are designed for all the family and aimed to help parents improve their child's confidence while having fun in the water.

"Storytelling can be a fun and powerful way to encourage children to learn and so it was critical the activators were equipped to bring these memorable characters to life in the pool."

INVESTMENT

Tories pledge £550m football boost

The Conservative Party has promised to invest £550m in grassroots football – if it wins the general election.

The funding is part of a larger strategy to win the bid to hosting the 2030 World Cup.

Prime Minister Boris Johnson said the investment would “transform lives with a legacy to match the 2012 Olympics”.

“A Conservative Majority Government will put a £550m investment in grassroots football at the centre of its plans to back a UK and Ireland World Cup 2030 bid,” Johnson said.

“The new investment, the biggest ever government boost for grassroots football, will underline the Conservatives’ support for the bid and demonstrate its vision for the tournament as a catalyst that will unleash the power of the game at a community level.”

According to the plans – which would mark a four-fold increase in investment and is part of a £2bn plan to “transform grassroots football” – by the time of the 2030 World Cup, every family in England will be, on average, 15 minutes from a well-maintained local football pitch.

“The plan will turbocharge the current programme to deliver 2,000 new synthetic pitches,” Johnson added.

Clarity, but not certainty

The election is now over and we have a new Conservative government with a significant working majority in parliament.

This means that the new government will be able to take forward the deal that the Prime Minister negotiated with Brussels and that the UK will leave the EU by 31 January 2020 at the latest.

At this stage, everyone's attention will focus on the government's negotiation of a trade deal with the EU which will determine our future relationship with the UK's largest inbound and outbound tourism market for the foreseeable future.

Beyond a no-deal

While there is a significant benefit to the tourism industry in having some clarity regarding what is going to happen and when, there are still a large number of considerable hurdles to overcome before we can have certainty as to what the future will look like for the sector.

Considerable work was undertaken during the planning for a possible no-deal Brexit to ensure that tourism travel between the UK and the EU would not be interrupted including agreements on aviation, rail and coaching services. However, there are many other issues that need to be resolved as part of the forthcoming trade negotiations that will be equally important in determining the future of the industry.

These issues include the ability for UK businesses to source workers from the EU, the ability of UK tourism employees to work in the EU as tour operators, guides and company reps, whether UK companies will have to comply with EU rules on compensation payments and the Package Travel Directive, and whether EU nationals will be able to enter the UK using National ID cards.

Policy issues

The government has already made pronouncements on its policies with regard to many of these issues, but these policies could well change during the course of trade negotiations with the EU.

The reason being that if the government is to negotiate the comprehensive free trade agreement with the EU that it says it wants to, then it will have to be more flexible with its policies on some of these issues – staying more aligned with EU rules than it would like and having to compromise on some aspects of cross-border employment.

So, while we now have some clarity over the process, we are still a long way from having certainty over the outcome. ●

HERITAGE

V&A launches preservation platform

The Victoria and Albert Museum (V&A) in London is demonstrating its commitment to protecting the world's cultural heritage and supporting communities that suffer cultural loss, through the launch of a new Culture in Crisis Portal.

A free digital resource, the portal allows users to register their preservation projects and search for those already in existence.

Launching the service, the V&A said that it hopes the portal will become the world's largest and most accessible database of cultural heritage preservation projects.

Set up in 2014, the Culture in Crisis programme works to combat the damage caused to cultural heritage through conflict, criminal acts or natural disasters.

It seeks to provide a forum for those working on the preservation of cultural heritage to share information, raise awareness and inspire and support action, and the V&A said the new portal was a step toward achieving this.

"We understand the impact of cultural heritage loss on communities and the contrasting positive role its preservation can have in rebuilding and recovering these areas following conflict and disasters," said the V&A in a statement.

ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION

Take action to "prevent future theme park deaths"

The report has been sent to Alton Towers, Legoland, Thorpe Park, Merlin Entertainments and Lightwater Valley Theme Park, as well as Drayton Manor

UK theme parks have been advised to take action to prevent future deaths, following the conclusion of an inquest into the accidental death of Evha Jannath at Drayton Manor in 2017.

The 11-year-old from Leicester was killed on a water rapids ride called Splash Canyon in May of that year after she stood up in the boat just as it hit a buffer designed to direct boats to the end of the ride.

Although a conclusion of accidental death was recorded, the coroner's report by South Staffordshire assistant coroner Margaret Jones said that action should be taken by all theme parks to prevent future deaths.

■ The Splash Canyon ride at Drayton Manor has been closed since the incident in May 2017

The report has been sent to Alton Towers, Legoland, Thorpe Park, Merlin Entertainments and Lightwater Valley Theme Park, as well as Drayton Manor and for all the theme parks to respond to the report by 8 January 2020.

Plans for the ambitious London Resort are beginning to take shape, as the first visuals were released for the upcoming theme park

■ The park has been described as one of the most ambitious theme park projects in Europe

London Resort Holdings Company (LRCH), operator of the upcoming London Resort theme park and entertainment destination in Swanscombe, Kent, has released new concept artwork showcasing the first phase of the 535-acre resort.

The park, which has been described as one of the most 'ambitious theme park projects in Europe', will be the first development of its kind to open in the region since Disneyland Paris in 1992. It is expected to open in 2024 and will consist of six lands: The High Street, The Studios, The Woods, The Kingdom, The Isles, The Jungle and The Starport.

Guests will enter the resort via The High Street – a plaza with a range of shops, restaurants and hotels, as well as a convention centre and a waterpark – before making their way to The Studios, a warehouse district offering thrills and high-speed car chases.

Aimed at a younger audience, The Woods will be an enchanted fairytale land that “takes visitors on an adventure through the pages of a storybook”, while The Kingdom, inspired by Arthurian legend, is an immersive realm of swords, sorcery, castles and dragons.

A fantastical land with giant creatures and mythical beasts, The Isles will combine ‘jaw-dropping’ architecture with technology to create memorable rides and experiences. The Jungle will take guests back in time to discover the ancient ruins of a long-lost Mesoamerican civilisation.

The final land, The Starport, will be dedicated to big thrill rides, and will give guests a glimpse into the future and bring them face to face with aliens.

The park will feature IPs from Paramount Pictures, after reaching a new deal with the film studio back in July, as well as the BBC and ITV.

“We’re creating a destination that maximises all the new immersive and interactive technologies and experiences in the world,” said PY Gerbeau, CEO of LRCH.

“We won’t just be creating a world-class leisure destination, it will also be one of the most sustainable theme parks on the planet.”

The park has also recently announced a partnership with EDF Energy that aims to make the London Resort the most sustainable major theme park destination in the world. The partnership will see the resort pursue a Net Zero emissions goal, in what is believed to be a first for the global tourism industry. ●

■ The number of inactive children is slowly decreasing – by 3.9 per cent over the past year

Active children

The latest Active Lives study from Sport England has shown that children's activity levels are on the rise

Almost half of children and young people (46.8 per cent) in England are doing the recommended average of 60 or more minutes of physical activity a day.

The figure, from the second annual Active Lives Children and Young People Survey, shows there has been a rise of 3.6 per cent in the number of active children over the last year.

In total, 3.3 million children are now meeting the new recommended Chief Medical Officer Guidelines – an increase of 279,600 when compared with 2018. Crucially, the figures show that there has been a rise in children getting active outside of school, with 57 per cent now doing an average of 30 minutes or more a day outside of school (up 4.6 per cent in the last year), compared to 40 per cent being active at school. Activities that have seen a particular increase in popularity outside of school include active play, team sports and walking.

At the other end of the scale, 2.1 million children and young people (29.0 per cent) are doing less than 30 minutes of physical activity a day. This means that the number of inactive children is slowly decreasing – by 3.9 per cent over the last year. Another 1.7 million (24.2 per cent) children are 'fairly active' taking part in average of 30-59 minutes a day.

There is a persistent inequality factor in activity levels, with children from the most affluent families more active (54 per cent) compared to the least affluent families (42 per cent) – while boys remain more active than girls at every age from five up.

Commenting on the figures, Jack Shakespeare, director of children, families and research at ukactive, said

During the summer holidays children's fitness levels fall by around 74 per cent, and by even more in areas of high deprivation

■ In total, 3.3 million children are now meeting the new recommended Chief Medical Officer Guidelines – an increase of 279,600 when compared with 2018

While it's positive that activity levels are increasing for some children, it is clear that stark inequalities remain entrenched the figures show that increasing exercise opportunities outside of school is working.

"The report shows that out-of-school provision is helping children to be more active," he said. "ukactive's members are clearly playing a lead role in delivering out-of-school provision and we remain committed to working side by side with Sport England to make this available to all, regardless of gender, race or affluence."

Shakespeare added, however, that the persistent gaps in activity levels that remain between genders – and affluence – need to be addressed.

"While it is positive to learn that activity levels are increasing for some children and young people, it is clear that stark inequalities remain entrenched for many children across the UK. It is unacceptable that physical activity levels are lower among girls, children from poorer backgrounds, and those who are black, Asian or from a minority ethnic group.

"The new Tory government must make physical activity opportunities for all children and young people an urgent priority, not just for the physical health of the next generation but for their mental and social health too.

"Our research shows that during the summer holidays children's fitness levels fall by around 74 per cent, and by even more in areas of high deprivation. However, 39 per cent of community sports facilities remain locked behind school gates. The government has a duty to protect the most vulnerable in society." ●

Political commitment

A physical activity hustings – held before the Tory landslide election victory – saw cross-party support for exercise as prevention

Representatives from the three main political parties have backed the view that physical activity has a major role to play in the nation's health by reducing the burden on the NHS.

A trio of politicians – Tom Watson, the ex-deputy leader of the Labour Party; Nick King, the Conservative candidate for Makerfield, Greater Manchester; and Lord Addington, the Lords spokesperson for sport for the Liberal Democrats – made the pledge during a sport and physical activity hustings in London. The hustings was held just two weeks before the Tory landslide election victory on 12 December.

The panel agreed that, for prevention to have more impact, more work needs to be done to increase the opportunities for all parts of the population to engage in physical activity.

■ The hustings were held just days before Boris Johnson led the Conservative Party to a historic election victory

“ If you want to save money, you have to get more people physically active – it really is that easy ”

“If you want to save money, you have to get people active – it’s that easy,” Lord Addington said.

Tom Watson, speaking about the public health crisis in the UK, added: “It requires middle-aged people with health-related conditions to be more active, as there will not be enough oncologists in 10 years’ time.”

Jointly hosted by ukactive and the Sport and Recreation Alliance, the lively debate also saw all parties back other key election policies identified by ukactive – such as the rejuvenation of high streets, improving the health of young people and the creation of an active workforce.

The panel were also challenged on what their parties would do to reduce barriers for the leisure sector and encourage growth.

Nick King said that in relation to reviewing business rates, there is a clear opportunity to “put forward a case for physical activity”, following his party’s pledge to reduce rates for pubs, music venues and small cinemas.

Tom Watson spoke about an active workforce being a more productive workforce and, referencing evidence from the ukactive National Summit, said there is a “bottom-line interest to UK plc in ridding people of these public health conditions”.

Meanwhile, Lord Addington underlined his party’s stance on improving active travel by improving cycling networks to make the option easier for more people.

ukactive CEO Huw Edwards said: “One of these parties will be in power on 13 December. The opportunity tonight was for our sector to question them and on the role our sector can play for a more active, healthier society.” ●

■ The panel agreed that more work needs to be done to increase opportunities for all parts of the population
